Surveillance Video Needed for Entertainment District

George Street is located in the center of historic downtown St. John's, Newfoundland, and is a popular entertainment district with 22 pubs, clubs and bars in a two-block span. With many hotspots open until 3am on weekends, the area is busy well past dark. While some establishments have surveillance cameras on the exterior of their facilities, the Royal Newfoundland Constabulary required a police-controlled public safety video system to help deter criminal activity and enhance emergency services response, as well as to collect valuable evidentiary information and aid police investigations.

George Street is a popular nightspot in St. John's Newfoundland.

Problem: Surveillance Required for Busy Entertainment District

- Police investigations of incidents in popular nightlife location require surveillance video
- Increased activity occurs in the evening and nighttime hours in areas of low light
- System must withstand long periods of harsh weather

Solution: AutoDome Day/Night Camera Systems

- AutoDome Day/Night Cameras provide high quality images in low light conditions
- 26x optical zoom provides details needed to distinguish individuals even with cameras mounted on streetlamp poles
- Rugged, pressurized housing protects against rain, sleet and snow and includes a heater/blower that prevents fogging

AutoDome cameras are mounted on streetlamp poles in areas where incidents are likely to occur.

Results: Effective Video Surveillance for Police Investigations

- Cameras placed in areas with frequent calls for service capture crisp video day and night, enhancing public safety
- High quality images delivered in low light conditions ensures the system produces usable video at times of peak activity
- Recordings saved for thirty days assist police officers in investigations of complaints, assaults and other incidents
