

Presently, Mr. Portale is the Chief Technologist for Mobility Solutions at Lockheed Martin. Mr. Portale has over 30 years of executive leadership, program management, systems engineering, software development and business development expertise...20 years of this experience with Lockheed Martin and IBM. In addition, Mr. Portale was the Chief Information Officer for a Washington D.C.-based Corporate Investigations firm and a consultant with one of the top consulting firms in the United States. Mr. Portale began his career in the R&D Division of the National Computer Security Center at NSA.

Previously, Mr. Portale was the Vice President for Mobiquity, a mobile solutions firm specializing in helping clients develop and implement comprehensive mobility strategies for their customers and for the enterprise, focusing on delivering a rich mobile user experience.

For the last five years, Mr. Portale has been responsible for helping clients develop and implement secure mobile strategies and integrate applications to improve the mobile interaction model with their customers, employees and business partners. Mr. Portale has helped clients decide on mobile platform approaches (Issued vs. BYOD), development approaches (Native, Hybrid, HTML5), Mobile Device Management approaches, and the characteristics for the ideal mobile application portfolio. In addition, Mr. Portale has helped multiple clients integrate cloud, cyber and big data solutions to address real mission requirements. Mr. Portale regularly presents to CEOs, CTOs, CIOs, and CMOs on the value of mobility in today's business model and the applicability of mobile solutions in the client's vertical. Mr. Portale has spoken frequently at industry events, including AFCEA, NIST, AUSA etc. and has worked extensively in the government, military, retail, healthcare, pharma, oil & gas, public sector, financial services, manufacturing, energy, and agribusiness verticals.