Chicago, Illinois – January 28, 2010 – PositiveVision, a leading provider of information technology software and support for the manufacturing and distribution industry in the greater Chicago area, announced that they will be allocating additional resources to their network support and service package, providing an increased value to their clients.

This announcement is particularly important for businesses who do not have an IT staff or those who lack the internal technical expertise to solve some of the challenging IT requirements faced by their organization. Manufacturing and distribution companies that use PositiveVision's software solutions will now be able to have all of their IT managed by one vendor, integrating all systems together for maximum use and growth.

Of this new service, Bob Baran, President of PositiveVision stated, "We have found that by becoming a 'one-stop-shop' we are better able to meet and fulfill the needs of a wide-range of clients. With full integration within their current systems combined with comprehensive functionality, this really is a standout service in the market. We look forward to becoming more involved with our clients and helping them achieve even more success with their information technology."
