Why should you care about lovable marketing?

Some things in life have short-term goals and, when achieved, give us immediate rewards. Delivering a stellar company presentation, for instance, can contribute toward a promotion.

Other things in life have long-term goals, which inherently means we don't get rewarded until later in life. Ensuring that your child gets into a good school, for instance, is something that you have to start planning for early on.

Clearly, the best way to approach this seemingly contradictory dynamic is to align your short-term goals with your long-term goals. In marketing, however, we often see that short-term goals dominate decision-making processes and often lead to short-term solutions.

Buying an email list, for instance, is a short-term solution for getting a lot of subscribers who will receive your marketing communication. Yes, you may get rewarded for expanding your email database and moving these numbers up. But in the long-term your list will dwindle significantly and this unethical practice will hurt your reputation as an email sender and, frankly, as a brand.

The long-term solution to this same goal—growing your email database—will be to build an opt-in policy and appeal to people with your valuable marketing content and expertise. The results of such practice will be much more powerful and lasting.

That is why we at HubSpot care about long-term goals and long-term solutions. Getting people’s love through noble marketing is certainly a long-term ambition we share.

Making lovable marketing isn’t something you can achieve in a day or two. It is something that requires intentional thought and consistent efforts. And it’s totally worth it. We would love for you to join us in this journey.

What constitutes marketing that people love?

What constitutes marketing that people love? This is a big question, and one that can open the doors to tremendous business opportunities. In this ebook, we seek to find the answer to that question and help you implement it across your marketing assets.

First, let's take a look at some indisputable characteristics of lovable marketing.

People love marketing that is:

..... ● EDUCATIONAL & HELPFUL

This is the so-called educational or informative marketing: it provides answers to a question, need or concern that you might have. This is the marketing you love when you are in a research mode and trying to obtain specific information to order to achieve your goal as a marketer.

How-to blog posts and step-by-step videos, for example, would fit into this type of marketing. It borders on the role of consulting and even customer service.

Share This Ebook!

..... ● TIMELY & CUSTOMIZED

In order for marketing to be truly helpful, however, it needs to be available to you at the right time. If you are facing a certain challenge and are actively searching for a solution, wouldn't you love to find it right in your inbox?

Let's say you are organizing a wedding and looking for the right venue. In your research, you might have visited a few websites, but your heart will be won by the company that follows up with you, acknowledging what you are searching for and offering to help.

Amazon is the classic example of a website that customizes viewing experiences based on the needs and preferences of its customers.

..... ● CONSISTENT IN LANGUAGE & MESSAGE

In order to make marketing people love, you need to consider the experience of the user across their different lifecycle stages: from the first time they encounter your brand, through their interaction with your website and content, to the point of converting into a customer, and their long-term success as one. By making this movement across different lifecycle stages consistent and fluid, you remove hurdles and encourage your audience to become evangelists for your brand. That is something Apple has been able to accomplish with huge success.

CHAPTER 1

DEVELOP A STELLAR MARKETING OFFER

“Think like a publisher.”

Your marketing campaign should be built on a solid marketing offer that addresses the first characteristic of marketing that people love:

..... ● EDUCATIONAL & HELPFUL

Constantly coming up with new content ideas, however, can be overwhelming. To handle the demands of content creation, marketers have been told again and again to “think like a publisher.” It’s great advice, but what exactly does that mean? Just how do you think like a publisher?

Like publishers, inbound marketers must have a detailed picture of their target audience in order to create optimal content for them.

Who are your ideal customers and prospects? What are their biggest concerns, needs, and interests? Where can you reach them – on search engines, social media, or blogs – and what kinds of content do they prefer? These questions will help you develop buyer personas.

Focus on the Right Stage

Content plays a critical role in every stage of the inbound marketing process, from generating awareness about your company to helping convert leads into customers. But the types of content you should use to achieve each of these goals are often very different from each other.

AWARENESS

The prospect gets acquainted with your brand or realizes they have a need for your product/service.

RESEARCH/EDUCATION

The prospect identifies the problem and researches potential solutions, including your product/service.

COMPARISON/VALIDATION

The prospect examines the options and begins narrowing the list of vendors.

PURCHASE

The prospect decides from whom to buy.

What Content Attracts Traffic & Leads?

For the purposes of launching a powerful marketing campaign, you will focus on the first stage—creating awareness through your marketing content.

This means your marketing offer needs to attract a ton of traffic and generate new leads for your business. There are different types of content formats and topics that you can pursue to achieve this goal.

..... ● FINDING THE RIGHT TOPIC

In order to find what content topics capture the attention of your target audience, you should look at past data that you have access to. For instance, what are the most popular blog articles you have published? What are some of the most viewed pages on your website? Your historical performance should dictate your direction for new marketing content. If you don't have access to marketing analytics that give you this type of intelligence, look in the public domain (Google News, Google Trends, Twitter Trending Topics) for popular and newsworthy industry stories. Piggyback on this information by adding a personal spin, your expertise and comments.

Share This Ebook!

..... ● FINDING THE RIGHT FORMAT

You can create content in different formats, from text-based content like whitepapers, reports and ebooks to media content like webinars, videos and audio interviews. While you can host an internal brainstorm session and come up with creative ideas for different content formats that you can produce, it's important that this new content matches the needs and preferences of your target persona.

We at HubSpot, for instance, are using our Landing Page Analytics to explore how successful different types of content are in converting visitors to leads. If the conversion rate is lower than average, the marketing offer isn't appealing enough to our audience. If you have a sense of what that format is for your business, use it to build your marketing campaign around it.

Recruit a Team of Content Creators

You don't have to be the only one creating your company's inbound marketing content. You can use different voices from inside your organization. Technical folks, customer service people, C-level executives, product managers, and others in your organization have a unique take on important aspects of your business.

Get your coworkers to contribute by:

- ● Asking them to cowrite a whitepaper or an ebook.
- ● Interviewing them and posting short videos that share their expertise.
- ● Inviting them to give presentations or answer questions in webinars.

You can also look outside your own company for help creating content. New online content marketplaces are springing up to connect marketers with legions of freelance writers and editors who will take on blog posts, ebooks, and other writing jobs for you. You can specify the topic, your desired style and tone, and your intended audience, and you typically don't have to pay unless you accept the finished article. HubSpot customers can easily find external writers using Zerys or the WriterAccess, both apps available in the HubSpot Marketplace.

Repurpose Content

Almost every piece of content you create can be adapted, reused, modified and republished in another format. Make a habit of finding multiple ways to package and distribute the same information in different formats.

Here are a few ideas:

- ● Combine text from an old whitepaper with new videos to create a multimedia ebook.
- ● Turn videos or webinars into blog posts and ebooks or vice versa.
- ● Use commonly asked questions and comments from webinars to create a new ebook. These topics will directly address your prospects' pain points.
- ● Share all company presentations in multiple formats. Post the slides on SlideShare, upload the video on YouTube, and create a series of blog posts that dive into specific points of the presentation.

CHAPTER 2

PLACE OFFER ON YOUR WEBSITE

“ Your offer is one part of an information exchange; the other part is the contact details of your visitors. ”

In order to start generating new leads from your offer, you need to place it on your website. You will do that by creating a landing page, a web page that features a description and an image of the offer and a form for visitors to fill out in order to receive the resource.

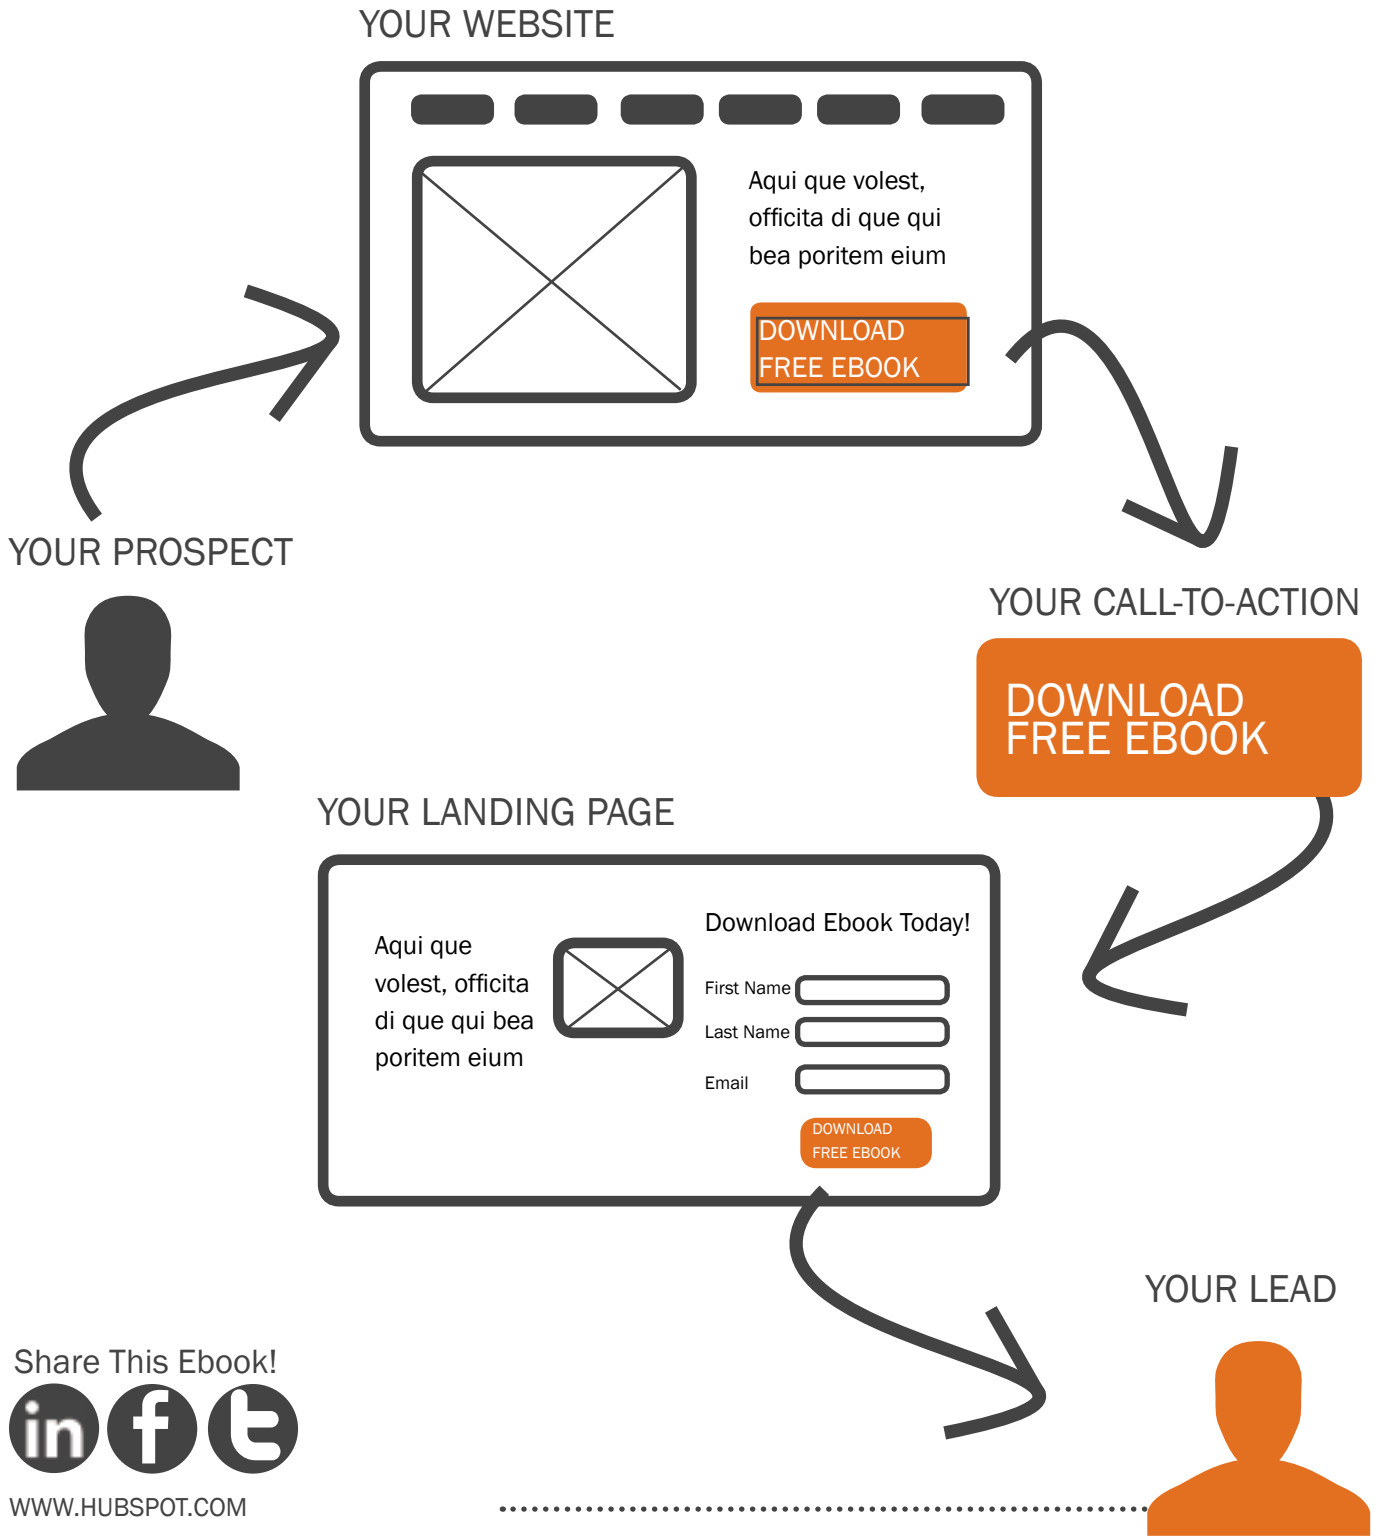

This transaction is type of an information exchange, in which the visitor gets the offer they are interested in and you receive the contact information of your visitors. They transition into their next lifecycle stage, that of leads.

This is the process of lead generation.

Share This Ebook!

Lead Generation Visualized

What is a landing page?

A landing page is a web page that allows you to capture a visitor's information through a lead form.

A good landing page will target a particular audience, such as traffic from an email campaign promoting a particular ebook, or visitors who click on a pay-per-click ad promoting your webinar. Therefore, it's important to build a unique landing page for each of the offers you create.

You can build landing pages that allow visitors to download your content offers (ebooks, whitepapers, webinars, etc.), or sign up for offers like free trials or demos of your product. Creating landing pages enables you to target your audience, offer them something of value, and convert a higher percentage of your visitors into leads.

Share This Ebook!

Making Your Landing Page Effective

There are several key components that make a landing page effective for converting a higher percentage of visitors into leads. The major areas of importance are the headline, the content of the page, and the form. Let's look at each of these, explain why they're important, and discuss how to optimize them.

..... ● HEADLINE

People's attention spans are short, especially online. This means you need to make sure your offer is as clear as possible. A good rule of thumb is to make sure your landing page passes the "blink test" – can the viewer understand the offer and what you're asking them to do in less than five seconds? Make sure your title makes your offer immediately clear so that the viewer understands what the offer is right away.

..... ● BODY

The body of your landing page should provide a description of what your offer is and why your visitors should download it or sign up for it. Make the specific benefits of the offer clear. Format the body of your page in a way that quickly conveys the value of the offer and the action visitors need to take. For instance, use bullet points and numbering to simplify the visual layout of the text, and use bold or italicized text to highlight the main points.

Share This Ebook!

An Example of a Landing Page

● Headline & Form Title

The screenshot shows a landing page layout. On the left, there is a text block with a headline, sub-headline, introductory paragraph, a paragraph about reinventing marketing, a paragraph about downloading the ebook, and a list of learning objectives. In the center is an image of the ebook cover. On the right is a form titled 'Download The Free Ebook' with various input fields and a 'Download' button. Dotted lines with arrows point from labels to specific elements: 'Headline & Form Title' points to the headline and form title; 'Image' points to the ebook cover; 'Description of Offer' points to the text block; and 'Form' points to the form fields.

● Image

● Form

Share This Ebook!

The other critical factor to consider is the effect of the length of the form on the prospect's willingness to fill it out. If the form is too long, prospects are going to stop and evaluate whether it is worth their time to complete all of those fields. So you need to find a good balance between collecting enough information and not asking for too much information that prospects are not willing to give it.

So what information should you ask for? Your goal should be to collect enough information through your form to enable you to both contact and qualify the lead. Fields such as name and email address gather contact information of leads, allowing you to put them in a workflow and nurture them in the future.

Fields like number of employees and role at company allow you to qualify the lead and find how likely they are to become a customer.

Design your form so you get enough info to contact and qualify the lead. We use this information to learn more about and qualify our leads before putting them into our sales funnel.

Share This Ebook!

.....● THE IMAGE

Your landing page needs to feature an image of the offer you are presenting. Visuals have the power to instantly capture the attention of visitors and should be leveraged to the fullest in your marketing. For instance, depending on what your offer is, you could feature an image of the cover page of an whitepaper or ebook, or headshots of webinar presenters.

.....● THE FORM

Remember that the ultimate goal of your landing page is to get people to fill out your form. Make sure that your form appears above the fold so that the viewer does not have to scroll down on the page in order to see it.

The length of your form inevitably leads to a tradeoff between the quantity and quality of the leads you generate. A shorter form usually means more people will be willing to fill it out. But the quality of the leads will be higher when visitors are willing to fill out more forms fields and provide you with more information about themselves and what they're looking for. Therefore, shorter forms usually result in more leads, but longer forms will result in fewer, but higher quality leads.

CAPTURE LEAD INFORMATION ON YOUR WEBSITE

Research shows that companies with 30 or more landing pages generate seven times more leads than those with fewer than 10. HubSpot makes it easy to build sophisticated landing pages so you can create more pages, improve your conversion rates and generate more leads.

The image shows a screenshot of a HubSpot landing page form. The form includes fields for Contact Method Preference, Email, Fax Number, Medical Specialty, Phone Number, and State. On the right side, there are fields for First Name and Last Name. A green dashed box highlights a section of the form, and a magnified view of an 'Email' field is shown in the foreground. The magnified view shows a blue 'Email' button with a plus sign and a red 'x' icon. Below the magnified view, there is a 'Download Now' button and an 'Edit' link.

“ Make your landing page visible on your website through a call-to-action. ”

Now that you have built a landing page for your offer, you want to make it visible on your website. You can achieve that through a call-to-action.

What is a call-to-action?

A call-to-action (CTA) is a hyperlinked image or text that direct visitors to landing pages.

The goal of a call-to-action is to drive traffic to a landing page. In order to increase visitor-to-lead conversion opportunities, you need to create a lot of calls-to-action, distribute them across your web presence and optimize them.

Where should you place your calls-to-action?

Placement is one of the most critical elements of leveraging the power of calls-to-action. So how do you decide which call-to-action belongs where? Simple. Calls-to-action should be spread across your web pages.

Your homepage should have a call-to-action. As your most frequently visited page, your homepage presents a huge opportunity to drive traffic to a specific campaign.

Share This Ebook!

Your Product/Service pages, About Us page and Contact Us page all need to include calls-to-action or the visitor will be deciding on their own what to do next. You need to help them decide what to do next. In fact...

“Every page on your site should help visitors understand what they should do next...”

...and therefore, include at least one call-to-action.

While calls-to-action are usually thought of as images and text placed on a website, the concept of a call-to-action can be found across all types of marketing. In all of your marketing assets you should be trying to drive people to get further engaged with your company. If the goal of a call-to-action is to drive traffic to your landing page, think about the different ways in which you can achieve that. For instance, you can use marketing emails and social media updates to drive traffic to your landing page.

BUILD WORKFLOWS

“Understand the nuances of your leads’ timing and needs.”

.....

So you have designed a stellar marketing offer and placed it on your website. But before you start driving traffic to it, you need to consider how you are going to nurture the new leads that you create. How are you going to further educate them about your company and product or service? You will need to use workflows.

An automated series of emails that pre-qualifies early-stage leads before handing them over to sales.

Workflows are also known as advanced lead nurturing, marketing automation, drip marketing, and auto-responders. Their goal is to make your new leads more sales-ready.

Share This Ebook!

The Value of Workflows

Only 5% - 25% of the traffic on your site is ready to do businesses with you at that moment.

THE REST ARE DOING RESEARCH.

25-50% of sales go to the vendor that responds first.

Share This Ebook!

By using workflows and nurturing your leads, you save your sales organizations time because you educate and qualify the lead overtime. This is only one of the reasons you should start doing lead nurturing. Let's look at some of the other benefits.

..... ● TIMELY COMMUNICATION

Study after study shows that email response rates decline over the age of the lead. In his Science of Timing research Dan Zarrella, HubSpot's Social Media Scientist, discovered that there is a positive correlation between subscriber recency and clickthrough rate, one of the key metrics of engagement.

..... ● AUTOMATION

Once you set up workflows, emails are sent out automatically according to your schedule as new leads come in. You might launch the campaigns and forget about them, but the emails will be doing the work for you, helping you qualify leads and push them down the sales funnel faster.

..... ● TARGETING

Studies show that targeted and segmented emails perform better than mass email communications. Lead nurturing enables you to tie a series of emails to a specific activity or conversion event.

SAVE TIME BY AUTOMATING YOUR MARKETING IN AN INBOUND WAY

Marketing automation helps businesses drive revenue by converting more leads into customers. Even the most qualified leads take time to develop, and often move at different speeds. Use HubSpot's Workflows app to warm up leads with a series of customized emails based on their activity on your site.

- ✓ Automatically trigger timed follow-up emails
- ✓ Trigger personalized emails based on your leads' behavior
- ✓ Use automated workflows to update a contact's profile information and lifecycle stage.
- ✓ Use workflows to add or remove contacts from custom segments.

Segmentation Ideas

Your contacts are not all the same. In order to do effective, targeted marketing, you need to break your contact database up into smaller groups or segments. Creating smaller segments allows you to group your contacts by their interests, industries, geographies, etc., and then create experiences and messages specifically for each segment. This will increase engagement, and help move your contacts farther down the funnel.

For instance, you can automatically segment your leads based on any criteria like:

- ● A CONTACT PROPERTY
Based on company name, state, size, industry, lead grade or lifecycle stage, etc.
- ● A FORM SUBMISSION
Based on ebook download, a webinar registration, a demo request, etc.
- ● AN EXISTING LIST
Based on presence in an existing marketing list.

All these are types of segmentation that HubSpot does, so sign up for a 30-day trial, and you can start experimenting with these options.

Making Lead Nurturing Lovable

Once you've created your segments, you need to figure out how you can help them move them through your sales and marketing process in a way that caters to their needs. Remember: We want to create lovable marketing. This means your communication has to be:

..... ● RELEVANT

..... ● TIMELY

..... ● SCALABLE

To do that, ensure that you have created nurturing campaigns that will resonate with each segment and make sure that your lists of leads are updating in real-time to include new leads who need to be nurtured.

HubSpot enables you to create workflows that can be triggered when one of your contacts becomes part of a segment. We call this a Smart List. For example, if someone downloads an ebook, indicates that their company size is between 50-200 employees, and says that they are in the manufacturing industry, we can send them a nurturing campaign designed specifically for them. If another company downloads the same ebook, but says that their company size is between 1-10 employees and that they are in the software industry, we can send them a different nurturing campaign that will be more relevant for their business.

Examples of Workflows

Wondering what your workflows might look like? They can be as simple or complicated as you wish them to be. Let's look at a couple of examples of hypothetical workflows that can help you with lead scoring and moving prospects down the sales funnel, accordingly:

MARKET OFFER TO EXISTING CONTACTS

“Notify your existing contacts about your new marketing offer. Start with an email announcement.”

Now that you have ensured that all new prospects who will grab your marketing offer will receive the appropriate follow-up communication, you can start thinking about sending traffic to your landing page.

First, think about ways to notify your existing contacts about the new marketing offer you have released. Your email list should be one of the most powerful contact databases that you have access to. (Your social following represents another growing database of evangelists.) So how would you go about making this announcement to your email list?

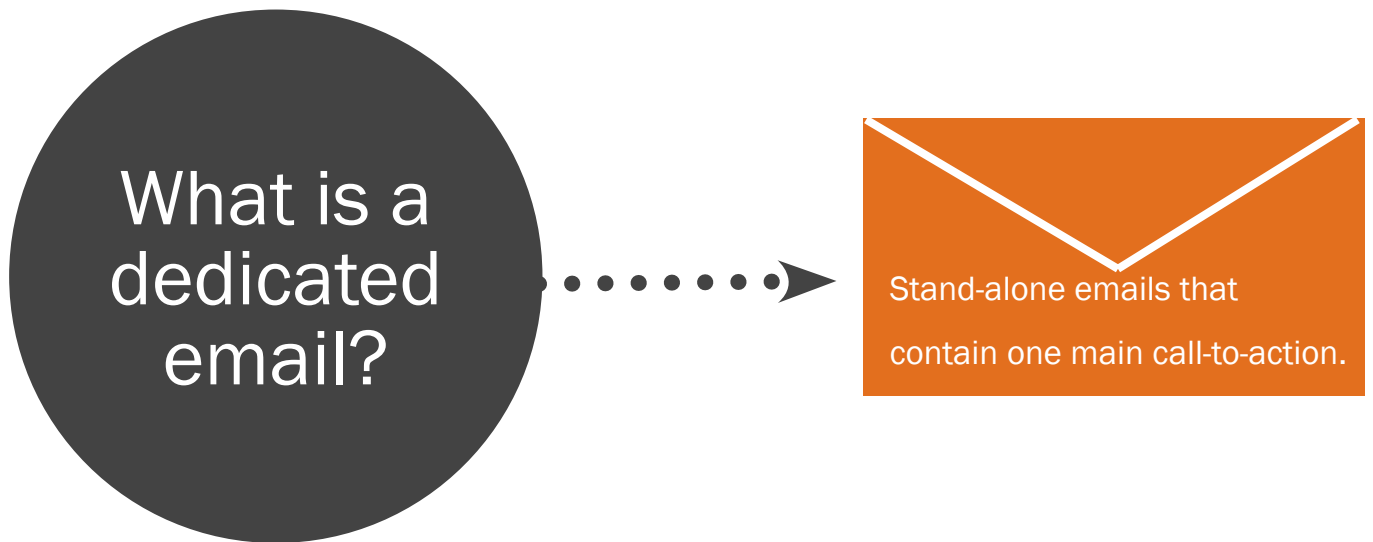

Share This Ebook!

Dedicated Email Send

The best way to get a lot of traffic to your new landing page is to send a dedicated email.

For instance, you can be notifying your target audience about a new whitepaper you have released or invite them to attend an event that you are hosting. Dedicated emails help you set up the context to introduce the main call-to-action.

Dedicated sends can be used to reach out to your entire email database or just a segment that you think this marketing offer applies to.

While there are instances when all of your subscribers should be notified about a specific marketing campaign, such as a timely new offer or an upcoming event, in most cases you would want to segment heavily based on your subscribers' persona.

Tips for Your Email Send

Dedicated email sends are generally easy to set up and measure. They are certainly not as complex as newsletters, for instance. Still, there are some best practices that you should keep in mind when you craft your email:

..... ● FEATURE ONE CALL-TO-ACTION

Dedicated sends focus on driving results for one call-to-action. As a MarketingSherpa case study of Kodak’s successful list growth tactic explains, “These calls-to-action were not stuffed at the end of a newsletter or tacked onto another message. They were the focus of a dedicated email, which gave them much more impact.”

..... ● PERSONALIZE EMAILS

Show your prospects that you know them. Personalized emails not only increase your open and clickthrough rates, but also demonstrate a deeper relationship with your audience. Make sure to use a consistent voice across your marketing communication.

..... ● DESIGN MOBILE EXPERIENCES

Make sure your email layout displays well on mobile devices. As more people start checking email on their smartphones, you need to optimize for that viewing experience.

Share This Ebook!

.....● MAKE YOUR EMAILS SOCIAL AND SEO-FRIENDLY

Make sure that your recipients can share your email content on social media. Integrate social media sharing buttons in your marketing emails to facilitate that activity. Also, make sure that your emails create a web-only version which will ensure you are leveraging your email for SEO.

.....● CLONE & REUSE

Once you have your email template in place, building dedicated sends should be easy. You will generally grab some of the information already on the landing page, make a few tweaks to it and spend most time on nailing down the subject line.

.....● MEASURE PERFORMANCE FAST

Naturally, if you have one main message and call-to-action in your dedicated send, it will be easy for you to track progress. You can quickly check the email CTR, landing page views and conversions, and follow the long-term ROI.

PROMOTE OFFER THROUGH BLOGGING & SOCIAL

“Blogging & social media provide more opportunities to drive traffic to your landing page.”

Now that you have announced the release of your new marketing offer to existing contacts in your email database, you can start looking for other opportunities to drive traffic to your landing page. This is where you can leverage your blog and social media channels.

Blog and social media can increase the reach of your content and support your lead generation efforts. Just remember to always include a call-to-action: a link to your landing pages with the marketing offer.

Take excerpts from the content in your offer and feature it as blog articles or advertise it through social media and ask your followers for comments and shares.

How to Use Your Blog in the Campaign

When putting your blog post together, optimize your writing to grab people’s attention and to rank well in search engines. Don’t forget to introduce a call-to-action to the marketing offer you want to promote! Here are a few more tips for your blog post:

..... ● FEATURE A COMPELLING IMAGE

Include an image that conveys what the blog post is about. This is appealing to readers and helps them go through the text-based content. A blog post that has some type of visual that’s a photograph, a graphic or some type of infographic typically plays a little better than merely text.

..... ● WRITE AN EYE-CATCHING SUBJECT LINE

Headlines are the most important element of your blog posts. While there are quite a few elements that make up a successful blog post, one of the best things you can do to capture readers’ attention and entice them to view your post is to write an awesome blog title.

Share This Ebook!

.....● FORMAT

In blogging, it is important to break text up in chunks. Online reading is not like reading a physical book. The online reader needs to be able to immediately scroll through content to get to the subheaders and the bolded content and even bullet points. In that way you can make content more visually drawing and engaging.

.....● SOCIAL MEDIA SHARING

Give your blog content extended reach by including social sharing buttons (e.g. “Like,” “Share on LinkedIn,” “Tweet,” etc.) on every post. This will encourage readers to share you content with their personal networks and expand its reach beyond your own connections.

How to Use Social in the Campaign

While Twitter, Facebook, LinkedIn, Google+ and Pinterest are all different social media platforms, they have something fundamental in common: the element of information exchange. So with the creation of a good marketing offer to promote, you make your job on social media much easier because now you have content to share! Here are some other best practices when it comes to promoting your marketing offer through social media channels:

..... ● PLAN THE TIMING OF YOUR PROMOTION

Control how often you share your offers to ensure your account doesn't turn into a spam-bot. This will be contingent upon your business. For example, a recruiter will be more likely to repeatedly share offers to job openings because users will naturally be vested in that opportunity. However, users may not be as willing to download the same whitepaper about, for instance, improving heating systems.

..... ● DECIDE ON WHICH NETWORKS YOU WILL FOCUS

There are a lot of available social networks out there. Which one are you going to use to promote your offer? You probably don't have bandwidth to spend equal time on all of them. Look at your marketing analytics and your historical performance with different social channels. Identify the three networks that bring you the best results and focus on using them for supporting your campaign.

.....● MAP DIFFERENT CONTENT BASED ON THE NETWORK

Different social networks are effective at promoting different types of content. While visual content performs well on Pinterest and Facebook, simple copy works well for Twitter and LinkedIn. YouTube, on the other hand, is a strictly video sharing platform. Find out which social network makes the most sense for the type of marketing offer you have created.

.....● USE A HASHTAG

When promoting your offer on Twitter and/or Google+, consider using a hashtag. There's more to hashtags than simply adding a pound sign in front of a word. In fact, simply adding a hashtag to a tweet isn't going to give you any results; you need to integrate them to a marketing campaign.

As you develop your marketing offer, think of what hashtag would be relevant to this new resource. Try to use the hashtag on the landing page, your marketing emails and, of course, in your social media updates. That will help streamline a lot of the discussions around the offer and help you receive feedback.

CHAPTER 6

MEASURE
EVERY
CAMPAIGN

“ Revisit each element of the campaign and how it performed individually and as a part of a whole. ”

Now that you have created a marketing campaign from start to finish, you need to revisit each element of the campaign and how it performed individually and as a part of a whole.

There are a wide range of metrics that you need to look at in order to evaluate if your campaign was successful or not. If you are trying to have a quick peek at your overall performance, you should start with a look at the analytics tied to the landing page that hosts your marketing offer.

- ✓ views
- ✓ submissions
- ✓ conversion rate
- ✓ new leads
- ✓ new customers

What If Your Performance Was Poor?

Different metrics tell different stories. So if your performance was poor, you need to spend time and find out exactly which metric needs to be improved. For instance...

- ● If the number of views the landing page got is low, you need to work harder at promoting the offer and sending more traffic to it.
- ● If the conversion rate of the landing page is low, you need to focus on creating a more compelling offer or optimizing your landing page.
- ● If the number of new leads this offer brought you is low, it could mean that your existing contacts are not sharing your offer with new people. You need to either incentivize them or find venues of promotion to a new audience.
- ● If the number of customers the offer brought you isn't very high, that could mean your workflows aren't successful at qualifying leads to convert them into customers. You might need to revise the workflows and make them more powerful.

MARKETING ANALYTICS TO MAKE YOUR SALES FUNNEL MORE EFFICIENT

HubSpot's software tracks all of your marketing activities and automatically generates rich reports so you can spend less time waiting for your pivot tables to load and more time doing real marketing.

- ✓ Closed-Loop Reporting: Tie your leads back to a specific marketing initiative and calculate your marketing ROI.
- ✓ Website Analytics: Analyze your web traffic and see which sources are generating leads.
- ✓ Competitor Tracking: Analyze your competitors' online metrics.

The same story applies to the rest of the marketing components used in your campaign. You should be able to explore the number of new leads and customers you generated from each channel, and you should also have access to key performance indicators that give you cues on how to improve the final results of your campaign.

When it comes to calls-to-action, for instance, there are two key metrics that you can monitor in order to improve the effectiveness of this marketing asset:

..... ● If the view-to-click rate of your calls-to-action is low, make your offer more compelling so that more of the people who see the CTA, click through.

..... ● If the click-to-submission rate of your calls-to-action is low, focus on optimizing your landing page and making it perfectly aligned with your CTA.

workflow & email analytics

- ✓ clickthrough rate
- ✓ unsubscribe rate

The metrics behind lead nurturing and email marketing overlap. They show the performance of your email sends and the extent to which recipients engage with your email content.

- ● If the clickthrough of your emails is low, that could mean your offer isn't appealing enough to the recipients you are sending it to. Start creating more compelling offers or spend more time on segmentation. (Note that open rate might be a helpful metric, but isn't very reliable.)
- ● If the unsubscribe rate of your emails is low, think carefully about whether the people you are emailing have formally subscribed to receive your email communication. Maybe you need to revise your opt-in procedure or be more precise about setting expectations.

When it comes to blogging and social media marketing, here are some of the key metrics that you need to monitor:

blog post analytics

- ✓ page views
- ✓ inbound links
- ✓ call-to-action CTR

social media analytics

- ✓ clickthrough rate
- ✓ shares

Each of these individual metrics can help you identify weaknesses and strengths in your marketing campaign. However, don't forget about the bigger picture and stay focused on the number of new leads and customers your campaign (and each of your channels) generated. HubSpot's marketing analytics gives you access to the number of submissions, new leads and customers you drove by source.

In this way, you are able to compare the performance of each channel by looking at analytics that are critical to your business success. For your next campaign, you can focus on the assets that bring you the best results or you can focus on optimizing the ones that have the potential to perform better.
