

THROUGH TIME WITH SPECS HOWARD SCHOOL OF MEDIA ARTS

Our History

Since its inception, Specs Howard School has been dedicated to providing hands-on training in the media industries.

1970

Specs Howard School begins offering programs in basic radio performance and federal licensing requirements.

1973

Specs Howard School incorporates its first on-air radio station, WNLD, as part of the radio program curriculum.

1978

Specs Howard School receives national accreditations. In 1983, the school is approved for federal financial aid programs.

1981

Specs Howard School adds its first TV studio, allowing students to study camera operation, lighting, directing and video editing.

1994

Keeping pace with new technologies, the school adds non-linear digital video editing to its curriculum.

2008

Due to demand for graphic and web design professionals, Specs Howard adds the Graphic Design program.

2009

To reflect the new curriculum offerings, the school changes its name from Specs Howard School of Broadcasting to Specs Howard School of Media Arts. Specs Howard opens a satellite location at Studio Center in Farmington Hills.

2010

In response to increasing demand for web-based media professionals, the Digital Media Arts program is introduced.

2012

Specs Howard School converts all curriculums to 12-month blended learning programs that combine 2 days a week in the classroom with weekly online components.

For completion rates and other disclosures, visit specshoward.edu/consumerinfo
Financial Aid is available for those who qualify.

