Photography 101

When founder of C.L.L.E, Laura Lamb, explained the mission to new Marjorie Lee resident, Dan Wheeler, he was visibly excited. She barely stated the request to partner with the Mount Notre Dame art program sharing his passion for photography before he enthusiastically said “Yes!”

As a child, Dan would help his mother with her photography projects. He shared with the students in the Photography 101 class that his job was to hold up the blanket against the closet door to ensure that their makeshift darkroom was really dark. Dan began taking photos in high school, entering his work in local contests. He shared many of his photos that he created in high school. The students were impressed with his work and asked many questions about technique and where he found his inspiration. Dan also shared some of his current photos, including the photos that Dan displayed at Marjorie Lee recently. His portfolio called “Measure of a Woman” resonated with the ladies. They appreciated the symbolism in the art and how Dan poked fun at society measures women.

Finally, Dan shared his “Lensbaby” camera to the teacher and students and showed them how this unusual lens distorts pictures and creates interesting effects.
