Your COVID-19 checklist

Revisit Dynamic Ads setup

1. Check your catalog and pixel setup - required pixel events and product catalog fields, accurate availability data and match rates.
2. If you are not running Facebook Dynamic Ads yet, now is the time to start. As consumers are searching for products they need online, the dynamic ads recommendation algorithm will bring the most relevant products to people.

Consider local differences in your messaging

1. Be mindful of the local authorities' instructions in your ad messaging.
2. If you have special services, instructions, or shopping hours for the immunocompromised, communicate these in your ads.

Tailor your ads to the first-time online shoppers

1. Due to social distancing and health concerns, many people who are used to shopping in-store are now online. Responding to this shift can make a big difference to your business.
2. Messaging about your online options, availability, free shipping or delivery times can ease the experience and directing to your e-store.

Use automation to promote offers and products where the supply chain is still intact

1. Supply chain is impacted differently market by market and things can change fast. Leveraging automation to reflect these changes in your ads enables you to keep your ads going despite potential challenges.
2. If you have a product catalog in place reflecting the state of your inventory, utilize this in your ads to automatically communicate accurate availability.

Prioritize advertising products you can use at home

1. Consider increasing the budget for products that make people's lives easier and more comfortable in their homes
2. Create product sets or priority ranking for the relevant products in your Dynamic Ads set up.
