

WORKPLACE OF THE FUTURE

Workplaces are evolving at a rapid clip. Technology is transforming the way we work, and spaces are being reconstructed to support this transformation. In many ways, today's ideal work environment is a complete 180 from the standard office just a couple decades ago. As a business leader, you're probably wondering what's next.

CONSIDER THESE:

OPEN OFFICES

Broken-down walls and clear sight lines are a must in today's most forward-thinking workspaces. In the workplace of the future, expect even more openness with unassigned workstations and a variety of ergonomic options. An employee may begin the workday at a shared table, move to a stand-up desk and finish her day from a sofa.

COLLABORATION SPOTS

A trend that has been popular among creative firms has become a favorite within the technology industry: collaboration spaces. In the future, prepare to see businesses focused on areas designed for small-group discussions, break-out meetings and brainstorming sessions.

FLEX HOURS

Thanks to technology, many jobs can be completed at any time—so long as you have an Internet connection. In the future, we'll see a 24-hour workday in which employees can pick and choose office shifts that mirror their lifestyle and habits for the ultimate work-life balance.

WORKING REMOTE

Half of the workforce today enjoys telecommuting opportunities. As technology advances, this number is projected to grow exponentially. From home offices to coffee shops, coworking spaces to the great outdoors, working remotely will become standard practice.

PRIVATE SPACES

Collaborative spaces, open offices and boisterous coffee shops can be great for promoting creativity. But sometimes workers need to be alone. Whether it's a phone call to a client, a personal communication, a moment of noise-free concentration or a restorative power nap, private spaces allow workers a temporary place to steal away.

WHAT DO ALL OF THESE TRENDS HAVE IN COMMON?

They all require an integrated workplace management system. Discover how technology can prepare your workspace for today and tomorrow.

SCHEDULE YOUR LIVE, PERSONALIZED DEMO!

SCHEDULE NOW!

