Be a Doer, Not a Complainer

Shane Matzen

All of us as coaches have, without fail, sat among our brethren and talked about that select group of folks who sit up in the bleachers and seemingly have all the answers when it comes to our profession. In doing so, we usually run down the things that we do that none of the bleacherites see: coming up with game plans, watching film, ordering equipment for our programs, finishing the never-ending and growing pile of paperwork that comes with coaching, soothing hurt feelings and/or stoking a fire under our players, doing things for those kids to help them or their families, not to mention the job that we're paid 90% of our salary for: teach school. I have a challenge to throw out there to all of you, our state's coaches: when there are issues that affect us and our sport, STOP COMPLAINING...DO SOMETHING ABOUT IT. Am I guilty of being a hypocrite such as mentioned in the aforementioned situation? You bet. This challenge goes out to me as well.

Let's go back in time though if you will so that I can describe the genesis for the challenge I've thrown down. I was in attendance at our last two MBCA board meetings held the Saturday mornings of the State Tournament weekends. Kerwin Urhahn (the head of MSHSAA) and Kevin Garner (the director of basketball [as well as other sports and activities] for MSHSAA) were kind enough to spend 45 minutes the first weekend and over an hour the second meeting with us. They are making a sincere effort to reach out to us as coaches to make a difference. The thing about MSHSAA that few people (and we'll get to some of the ill-informed in a little bit) understand is that it is run by the schools, not by the group of people employed in that nice building along Highway 63 just east of Columbia proper. The information they receive to help them facilitate the association's doings often-times does not come from either enough sources or from the possibly wrong sources. Let me give you a couple of examples...

I told Kevin Garner during one of the meetings that as a member of the MSHSAA basketball advisory board that I really appreciated being put on a list of people that received the online NFHS survey on how we could improve our game and give our opinions on topics that they would make "points of emphasis" for the next season (an example is the location of where we should line up players for free throws). I really took that duty seriously and took the time to make my voice heard by spending 10 minutes completing the survey. My mouth fell open when he told me that of all the people who received that survey (more than just our board members to be sure), just at 50% responded. I can't tell you how many items on that survey are things that I've discussed among some of you as things that we just couldn't understand and how they needed to be changed. HERE WAS MY CHANCE TO LET THOSE IN A POSITION OF POWER KNOW HOW WE FELT! What a great opportunity (or so I guess half of us who received it thought).

MSHSAA is going to have available soon a database to get information like this directly to you as coaches for you to let them know how we want things done. A couple of these things that were discussed were better ways to run the state tournament and how to address "dead periods" in the summer. Kerwin was adamant that he wanted to do both of these things in a way that made logistical sense but also reflected what we desired. Until then, these sorts of decisions are still being made by our athletics/activities directors in conjunction with our school administrators. If you are fortunate like me, my higher-ups ask our coaching staffs what our opinions on matters that pertain to us before they send our school's vote in to Columbia. Many of you, unfortunately, are not being consulted and major decisions are being made from your school's end of things by people who are not directly affected by these votes. It is a MUST that you make your feelings known to those in charge at your school that you would like to at least SEE the ballot or referendum that makes its way to your school. If you still aren't allowed to be involved, well...I'll just let that one sit there where it is and let my silence voice my opinion of your situation.

Another thing that is going that will directly affect all of us is a state legislative action entitled House Bill 1802 (you can find information on this proposal at <http://www.house.mo.gov/billtracking/bills081/bills/hb1802.htm>). I'm not going to get on a soap-box and tell you how you should feel. What I do want you to do is be informed. The gist of this bill is that MSHSAA is being challenged as a governing body for our state's schools in direct contrast to its supposed role as a mechanism that is run by its members. Maybe the legislators who are sponsoring this bill are right, but you need to have the information in your hands to decide whether or not you support it or not and let your feelings be known to your local state legislators so that they know their constituents' feelings on the sides of this issue. You should know that this bill has not yet (and may not) reach the legislature floor for voting before this session ends.

Finally, here are a couple of questions I've asked many times, but will ask again: is there something the MBCA can do to help basketball be a better sport in Missouri? Is there anything that is going on with basketball that can be remedied by the MBCA, MSHSAA or some other body? I am giving you, the state's coaches and readers of this newsletter, the chance in a forum to make a difference. Starting next fall, I would like to publish in each edition of our newsletter a segment entitled "The Coach's Voice" where you have to do a couple of things: state the problem or issue you're seeing and/or encountering and give a solution to it. Oh, and since we're not dealing with some of the cowards we sometimes deal with as coaches (insert your unsigned letter or e-mail story here), you'll have to give your name and school (or city or town of residence if you are no longer coaching). Obviously, inflammatory accusations or non-factual information will not be allowed either. Since we only run four times a year during the school year, if I get a great, timely item I will share it with you through our e-mail distribution lists and I will also share it with Kerwin and/or Kevin at MSHSAA.

As the editor of this newsletter, a board member of the MBCA and a member of the advisory group at MSHSAA, I've been blessed with wonderful opportunities to make my voice heard. I have no illusions though that I have all the answers. I need your help to make contributions to these associations (oh, and my ego has been shot down enough over the years that I have no problem giving credit where credit is due so rest assured I won't take credit if you are the deserving entity of a great, new, creative idea). Or, contact your regional rep with the MBCA or the advisory board other than myself. I will try to live up this credo if you my reader will do the same: Be the coach and not the bleacher know-it-all not only when we're in the gym but outside as well.

CONGRATULATIONS: The annual award winners sponsored by the MBCA were presented at the 25th annual Academic All-State Banquet held Sunday April 13, 2008 in Columbia. The Academic All-State Team was honored along with the Richard Fairchild Coaches of the year. Mike Anderson, Men's Basketball Coach at the University of Missouri was the featured speaker. Yvonne Anderson of Hickman High School and Ryan Willen of Notre Dame Cape Girardeau were awarded the Show-Me State Games Scholarships by Show-Me State Games Executive Director Ken Ash. Special Olympics Missouri Ms SOMO Basketball Allie Schmidt of Parkville and Mr. SOMO Basketball Mike Evans of St. Joseph were presented plaques by MBCA. Finally, the showcase awards, Mr. & Miss Show-Me Basketball, were awarded to Scott Suggs (Washington) and Yvonne Anderson (Hickman) respectively.

ON A PERSONAL NOTE....Much congratulations go out to our MBCA President Jay Blossom on his Webster Groves team winning the 2008 Class 5 State Championship. Having the Statesmen on our schedule each year and getting to work on some things through our association with Jay, it's been a pleasure to watch the hard work he's put in this past decade and see all that hard work come to fruition. Not that our other state champions weren't well-deserved, but just from my being able to observe his teams over the years, it's nice to see that time and commitment really do pay off.

The Little Things-“Goin’ Camping”

By Jason Wolfard

Lindbergh High School

Hard Court Herald Associate Editor

Summer is about here and many of us are probably planning out what our teams are going to do and our summer camps that we run. This issue of “The Little Things” is designed to discuss some ideas to incorporate into your youth summer camp. If you already run a camp, hopefully you might find some small things to work into your camp. If you don’t run a camp, then hopefully this issue will help you get a jumpstart to start your own camp.

- Getting the word out: In smaller communities, getting the word out to the local youth about your camp is probably much easier than getting the word out to a larger community. Our overall goal is to get kids in the gym, but how do you get the information to them. Every year that I have camp I have a spreadsheet of all campers who are attending with their address, phone number, and email. One of the ways that I get information out to potential campers is to first start with the campers who came the previous year. Having their information makes it easy for me to send them a personal invitation to camp with a letter from the coach and two copies of the current flyer. In the letter I tell them to try and bring a friend this year. Sending it in the mail makes me feel as if that letter and brochure is going to get in the most important hands...the parents that fit the bill for camp. I also think that when a kid in fourth grade gets a letter from the head coach, it will excite him and he will bug his mom and dad to death to come to camp. I have also sent brochures to all my surrounding grade schools to be distributed. Sometimes I will color code my brochures so I know where campers are getting their information from. Another idea I picked up from Terry Hollander at St. Charles West is to make a poster with some action shots from your team. Have all the information about camp on the board and then have a slot that will hold brochures. Then you can go out and visit the grocery store or other places and ask them if you can hang your sign up. We also post an electronic version of the brochure on our website.
- What do the kids get?: You know that when you go to a clinic, you are wanting to know what kind of stuff you are going to get from it! Kids think the same way. I have seen camps that give just a t-shirt to kids, and camps that give a package of stuff to each kid. Here are some thoughts as to what to give each camper:
 - Camp shirt – This is probably the most common thing that all coaches who run a camp do, so I won’t go into too much detail. You can simply have a design/logo made by a t-shirt company, or you can go ahead and make your own. Camp shirts are another good way to get information out in the community about your program and camp. Trust me, the kids will wear them until they fall off, and then they will tie them up until they are shredded. Another idea that I learned from my old high school coach with camp shirts is to have different colors. He had a major rule that when it came to playing competitive games to avoid having shirts vs. skins and avoid the embarrassing situation of having the heavier set kid (or kids) having to go skins. Instead, he had different colors of shirts and when he divided up teams, each team got a different color and that was their team shirt of the week. I have used this for years now with our camp. We never run into the problem of the heavier kids having to go skins, and believe it or not the kids wear that shirt every single day.
 - Camp Basketball – give every camper a basketball at the end of the week. Not only is it another item that they get, but I have found that many of the campers have your players sign their basketball at the end of the week. A good place to get camp basketballs is Sterling Athletics.

- Water Bottles
- Know their name: A lesson I learned when I was working many camps was that I should know every kid's name in the gym. It really makes a difference to a kid when he can be called by his name rather than "hey you". Now I know it can be very hard to memorize names and put them with faces for just a week of camp, so here is a way to cheat the system. Farmers identify their cattle with numbers. Those numbers are put in the ear of the cow on little plastic name tags. We buy those tags and have the kids put them in their shoes with their name, grade, and line number written on it. This way you can call a kid over to talk to him and when you don't remember his name, you just have to look down at his shoe. It makes it easier on your coaches at camp during stations as well. The website for these tags is:
<https://www.ritcheytags.com/eartags-catalog.php?cid=2&cat=ah-folded-tags>
- "Knock-out Camp" – The world's greatest camp game! We all use it to kill some time and no matter what the kids love it. We also have many versions of it. Here is a list of some other contests to use at your camp besides knock-out, free throw contest, and three point contest:
 - Shooting Carnival – I got this idea from my high school coach. We have two shooting contests that take quite a bit of time to do. In the past we would just do them in one day and then move on. Now what we do is have two days of the "Shooting Carnival". We will put 50 to 60 minutes on the clock and at every basket have a contest set up with a coach (our contests are hot shot and three-point). During that time, the kids can visit any basket they want and participate in the contest as many times as they can in the time given. They are responsible for reporting their score to center court to a coach. After two days of the shooting carnival (each kid has had multiple chances to compete instead of just one), the top five move into the final round on Friday.
 - "Hot Shot" – There are five spots on the floor each worth a different amount of points (see diagram). The contestants have one minute to score as many points as they can. Campers can't make a basket twice in a row at one spot. If they make a shot from a spot, they have to go shoot from somewhere else and then they can come back. If a camper hits a shot from each spot, then they get a bonus 15 points. They can get their bonus points every time they hit a group of 5 shots (one at every spot).

- Ball Handling Competition – develop a ball handling routine at the beginning of the week (a combination of 6-8 drills) and then at the end of the week have a contest to see who can do the routine the fastest.
- Dribble Tag – all the kids get a basketball and spread out in the half court. When the whistle blows, they start to dribble around trying to knock the other campers ball out of bounds or make them lose their dribble. As the numbers get smaller, so does the area they can dribble in.

- Skills Competition – if any of you saw the all-star events in the NBA this year, then you have seen this contest. We are going to try and implement this year. It is a contest that involves shooting, running, passing, and dribbling. If you would like a copy of the setup, just send me an email.
- 3 vs 3 Tourney – divide the kids up into teams and have a tournament with the final 4 played on Friday.
- Shooting Stars Competition – this is also a new contest that we are trying to implement this year that I got from the NBA All-Star events. Teams will consist of a player from each league and a high school player. The players will have 1 minute to make 6 shots, but they have to alternate after each make. If you want a copy of this setup, just send me an email as well.
- The Hustle Award – this is a t-shirt that we have specially made for a camper that the coaches choose. This camper throughout the day has been all over the place (diving on the floor, taking charges, picking up loose balls, being a good teammate, hustling from station to station). The kids start to work really hard to get this shirt.
- Awards: At the end of our camp we have an awards ceremony where we give out trophies and ribbons to campers for different contests. We invite parents to attend the last 15 minutes of camp for the awards ceremony. Here is a list of awards we give out:
 - Ball Handling Champion
 - Three Point Champion
 - Hot Shot Champion
 - Free Throw Champion
 - 3 v 3 Champion
 - Skills Competition Champion
 - Shooting Stars Champion
 - League Champions
 - Sportsmanship Award (Voted on by coaching staff)
 - Best Defensive Player (Voted on by coaching staff)
 - Most Valuable Player (Voted on by coaching staff)

This is just a sample of things you can do at your camp and I am sure there many other great ideas out there that help make your camp a success. If you have any questions or ideas you would like to share, just shoot me an email at coachwolfard@sbcglobal.net and I would be glad to help you out in any way. Have a great summer!

Q & A With the Difference-Makers
BOB SUNDVOLD
Knights Basketball Academy

Coach Sundvold currently is a director with The Knights Academy in Kansas City (www.knightsacademy.net). Prior to helping the youth of the KC area with their game, he was the coach of the Kansas City Knights ABA team. He also is affiliated with The National Companies, a group which allows coaches to supplement their income while also pursuing their passion of teaching the game (www.bign.com/rsundvold). ESPN came calling this season and Coach Sundvold served as an analyst for the Collegiate Basketball Invitation Tournament.

The Iowa State basketball program received a major boost when Bob Sundvold joined its staff in May of 2001. Sundvold, the owner of over 25 years of NCAA coaching experience, spent eight years as a head coach at the NCAA Division I and II levels, compiling a 125-108 record. The 2002 Cyclone class was ranked as high as No. 2 nationally and the 2003 group was rated in the Top 20 in most of the major recruiting services. ISU earned two NIT berths in Sundvold's tenure with the Cyclones. ISU made the NIT semifinals in 2004 and finished that season with the second-highest home win total in school history (17).

Prior to joining the Cyclone family, Sundvold spent four years as head coach at UMKC (1996-2000). In his final year at UMKC, Sundvold led the Kangaroos to their first winning season since 1992-93 by posting a 16-13 record. That year's squad finished tied for second in the Mid-Continent Conference with a 10-6 record, the program's best showing since joining the league in 1994-95. During his tenure in Kansas City, Sundvold recruited and mentored MCC Player of the Year and Newcomer of the Year Michael Jackson.

Prior to his stint at UMKC, Sundvold had a successful four-year run (1992-96) at Division II Central Missouri State. He led the Mules to an 82-38 record, including three-straight NCAA Tournament appearances in his final three seasons. His 1994-95 CMSU squad posted a 24-8 mark and won the South Central Regional Championship, advancing to the NCAA Division II Elite Eight.

Sundvold proved to be one of the top assistant coaches in the nation before landing his first head coaching job at CMSU. He received his first big coaching break as an assistant coach at the University of Missouri in 1978. From 1978-91, Sundvold helped legendary MU coach Norm Stewart to unprecedented success. Nine NCAA Tournament appearances, six Big Eight Championships, four Big Eight Tournament Championships and over 286 wins were just a few of the achievements the Tigers accomplished throughout Sundvold's tenure at MU. Sundvold made one more assistant coaching stop in 1991-92, joining Charlie Spoonhour's staff at Southwest Missouri State. The Bears went 23-8 and earned a berth to the NCAA Tournament in his only season in Springfield, Mo.

Hard Court Herald: You've been involved in coaching at many different levels of the game, what sticks out to you as the advantages and disadvantages of each that you've worked?

Bob Sundvold: The great aspect of coaching at any level is that the game is the same....only the players change. The different levels give a coach a different level of player. BUT, the fundamentals and the strategy and the teaching are fairly consistent. I must admit that running our youth basketball academy has made me a better teacher and coach...as many know you have to have a vocabulary and "understand" your players. The ABA, a professional level, no "Semi-Pro" jokes please, was a great coaching job, nothing but coaching and handling player transactions. We had players that were coached by great college coaches, were well versed in many aspects of the game, could make adjustments in a 20 second timeout, so it stretches you as a coach...and the game was 48 minutes in length....a huge adjustment, especially with that many more possessions. BUT, your roster is ever-changing, we had 16 player transactions in a season, and unfortunately, you are only as secure as your organization's funding. The college game, which is where I have spent almost all of my time, is a great opportunity to influence and have an effect on a player, as a person and as an athlete. You get to recruit your team (which can be good and bad), put the pieces together, and play the system that you think best. The coach wears many hats in college, and they range from guidance counselor/psychologist, motivator, father-figure, recruiter, teacher, fundraiser, budget director, CEO, and you must WIN. I have never coached in high school, yet have always admired and envied the loyalties and passion many of our college players would have for their high school coaches, so I know that is a special time in the player/coach relationship time period.

Hard Court Herald: So many young assistant coaches are in the constant quest to be a head coach. As someone who has served at both the assistant and head coaching positions, what bits of wisdom would you give the up-and-comers who maybe have the viewpoint that he must keep climbing the ladder regardless of the situation?

Bob Sundvold: Pretty simple...too many coaches at all levels are worrying about jobs they don't get or have, thinking about jobs they would like to have and probably can't get, while not doing the job they have.

Hard Court Herald: If the move to "the next level" (i.e. the college ranks) is a viable thing for a coach, what advice would you give a young coach looking to be a part of a college program?

Bob Sundvold: Understand your role. If you are going in as an assistant, get to know the philosophy of the head coach, it is all that matters. Understand why you got the job. Are you brought in to implement strategy? Recruit? Are you the video coordinator? Academic coordinator? What is the talent you bring to the job? DO THAT JOB. I've seen too many coaches go into a college situation and not understand they are no longer the Head Coach, and have a hard time subjugating to the role they are hired for. College staffs are now becoming so role-oriented, and each coach has his responsibilities...it is vital that each coach does his job.

Hard Court Herald: In your years of coaching, do you have in mind a single big or a few major changes that you've seen occur concerning the way that coaches must meet the needs of their players?

Bob Sundvold: Player/coach relationships are truly one of the special areas of coaching. As players' socio-economic needs have changed, so has the role of the coach. Players want to be coached, they want to be held accountable, they want to be led, and they are relying on the coach to provide that for them. I would urge coaches to be very clear and specific in the areas that you want to hold them accountable then make sure that you hold them to it. If something occurs outside of the specific areas, you must use your experience and judgment to help the student/athlete. One more thing regarding coaching; there are too many coaches who are coaching too many areas of the game. Pick three areas that you want your team to be good at, or identified with, and be demanding and hold your teams to accountable in those three areas. If you want it to be defense, rebounding, shot selection...make it that. This should come following an analysis of why you are or are not successful. The teams that sustain a long level of success have an identity, and generally the coach has identified the areas important to his program and he coaches those areas. We get so caught up in a "master plan", and try to put everything in, so we go from A to B to C to D to E, but we may never get A accomplished, and come mid-season, we are back to A trying to get it covered. Some teams, due to lack of talent and experience, may only accomplish the A and B of your goals, BUT they will have a base to what you are trying to do.

Hard Court Herald: Finally, with all of the great teams and players you've worked with, do any of them stick out in your mind as just a special or unique experience to work with?

Bob Sundvold: Each team has its own identity and success and reward. I was with so many outstanding teams and players at the University of Missouri, that each has a special spot. When you become a head coach, those teams maybe "feel" more like your own.....we had a team at CMSU, now UCM, '94-'95 that earned the right to go to the Elite Eight. Very successful in terms of winning, and victories....but the thing that I remember most was the sacrifice of individual wants, and the acceptance of teammates faults and backgrounds, and believing and understanding that the team was greater than the individual.....allowed that team to have more success than they probably should have.

A View From the Sticks

By Matt Pearl

Hard Court Herald Small Schools Correspondent

Head Boys Basketball Coach-King City High School

I've been known to make a little too much out of things that are, in actuality, very insignificant. I suppose that's a writer's creative license — to notice the details of life that so many folks chalk up to ordinary.

On the other hand, some of them need to be noticed. I thought about several such instances during my March trip to Mizzou Arena in Columbia for the Class 1, 2 and 3 State Semi-Finals and Championships.

I sat in the grand venue that normally plays host to the Tiger basketball teams, my eyes scanning the building, trying to absorb the experience.

Of course, I've made the roundball pilgrimage to the University of Missouri for a number of years now, so it's not like the 2008 experience was significantly different from my earlier encounters with the championship event. Still, every time I enter the arena's main chamber, I find something new — and bring my own aspirations as a former high school player and current high school coach to the place where athletic dreams come true.

People behind me were complaining about something — admission prices maybe, or perhaps how much they were being charged for their Dippin' Dots. I wanted to ask them, "Yeah, but where else can you see what you're seeing now?"

Where else could these folks have journeyed and seen the young men and women they came to watch compete? Again, my thinking included a healthy dose of the writer's curse: habitually turning mountains to molehills and small school title games into the NBA Championships.

But I can tell you one thing: the kids competing on the floor that bears the name of Mizzou legend Norm Stewart all pretended to be Michael Jordans, Karl Malones or other such stars in their driveways. So I knew I wasn't the only dreamer in the room.

Being a coach at a Class 1 school in the northwest corner, I held a special interest in watching Missouri's rural athletes duking it out for championship rights.

As the small school athletes took the floor for their various contests, one couldn't help but notice the small but dedicated groups of students who took their spots behind the respective goals. The arena had significant amounts of empty seats for each of the contests I watched — something I've heard people complain about since.

But don't you think having a few empty seats can add some character to a place like Mizzou Arena? When you see the size of a Glasgow or Meadville crowd, doesn't it bring you to a realization that we all should already have?

On small school weekend, we're watching tiny teams from tiny schools, usually in or near tiny towns. But to the kids competing, there's nothing small about the importance of the championship events.

Ask Jefferson boys, a team that's made four straight title game appearances and won the past three, if it matters to them that their crowd — which travels very well, by the way — was smaller than that of some of the larger schools. I've met those kids: I promise you it's no small, insignificant thing to them.

I'd love to give everyone reading a real view of what life is like in the tiny towns that dot the Missouri landscape, always playing second fiddle to their urban counterparts. The truth is, that's all I really know to talk about. The largest town I've ever lived in was Maryville — a Class 3 competitor for several years now.

But as I sat in the undercrowded gymnasium, the atmosphere became somehow significant — as if what was occurring in the arena had reached larger proportions, the size of event the amazing structure was intended to house.

When you put things in their simplest terms, basketball became the same exciting, thrilling, living thing that we've come to expect in the Final Four or NBA Championships. Instead of a floor packed with Goliaths, however, we get the thrill of enjoying the small school experience — where every competitor is a David himself, the giants having played out their fates the weekend before.

There are a million reasons I choose to live in a small town, and the list gets longer every year that I'm blessed to live on this earth. Not the least of these reasons is that I have the real thrill of watching students come together into basketball teams.

Some are legitimate athletes. Most have a specialized or limited share of athleticism. Some would be ashamed to try a lay-up at a big school full of college hopefuls.

The good news is, however, that they make championships for those kinds of people. They make tournaments and title games for my kind of people.

So, to anyone who has ever let a player leave practice because he “has cows out” or who couldn't make a summer basketball camp because he'll be “puttin' up hay all week,” I say to remember something I consider to be very important. Remember that everyone that ever loved the game had the hope and dream of chasing a championship.

Remember that it's not a shame to be from somewhere small. I sat in the grandest basketball arena in the State of Missouri and watched the little guys play for the same hardware as the big dogs.

We may be from “the sticks,” but our dreams are just as real. We live down gravel roads, but we crave every ounce as much glory as the folks that live down boulevards and crowded city avenues.

You Haven't Taught Until They Have Learned: John Wooden's Teaching Principles and Practices

by: Swen Nater & Ronald Gallimore

website: FitInfoTech.com

We all know the greatness of Coach Wooden as far as wins and championships are concerned. Many people know the great things he has done and said on and off the court as well. There is so much in this book, however, that no one could know; except a former player (Swen Nater). Coach Wooden believed he was first and foremost a teacher – he just happened to teach the game of basketball.

I can pretty much guarantee that no matter how much you know about Coach Wooden or how many books you've read by him or about him, you have not read anything like this book. There is plenty to learn about Wooden – how he taught and why he did things he did – but there is so very much that you can take and relate to your position. Whether you are a basketball coach, teacher, parent, manager, or in any position of leadership; you are a teacher. Someone is learning from you. This book so effectively helps you understand how to teach. Having gone through college as an education major, I believe this book should be required reading for all up and coming teachers. It is simply phenomenal! (Hey, there's an adjective!!)

If you would like to learn many things about teaching, coaching, and leadership that you have not been taught, I suggest you get this book now! It is definitely one book you will turn to time and again.

Welcome...

...to the home of the best basketball tools on the web!! Whether you are a school team coach or a parent coaching your son or daughter's select team, we have each of you in mind as we make our tools available for you!

We have been posting since March 1, 2008 and it will take some time to get the site to where we want it, just like it takes time to build a winning basketball program and to improve as a player. We hope you will come back frequently and grow with us.

From the Other End of the Court-“Little Wonders”

By Annette Lowrey

Hard Court Herald Girls Basketball Correspondent

Head Girls Coach-North Daviess High School

Elementary basketball games are contests that pose as training grounds for our high school programs and are the place where coaches truly begin to see how long the winning road can be. As a coach, it is refreshing to see the wide-eyed enthusiasm of the players, their smiles, and often, their lost determination to please.

In my small school, like many others, one teacher/coach coaches these youngsters all through their school careers. This fact lends itself to many pros and cons. On the positive side, the coach knows the development of the kids who play basketball. You know their parents, their school work, and behavior in school and probably in the community. The negative aspect is, well, the same. Let me illustrate.

This is the second year that I did not get to coach the elementary boys and girls in our school. Though it was nice to have this short season off, this year I got the opportunity to coach a few of the games in the absence of their regular coach. What an eye-opener! The basketball language is so different. What never changes is the obvious talent and game know-how of some of the players. It is a given that at least one player will shoot at the wrong basket, one player will tower over the others, no one wants to sit out, and, at most, one player will be able to dribble the ball with confidence.

In this case, I did know most of the parents, but was very unfamiliar with these players' ability or development. The regular coach had briefed me on his starters, offense and defense, etc. The kids I knew and had taught had grown, matured, and learned to play basketball under the guidance of another teacher. How refreshing! It was great to go into the game not knowing their daily behavior and struggles. It was great to observe the players with no preconceived bias. There were no negatives. I changed my terminology to better suit the group, and the players at least pretended to understand my terminology of basketball.

It was ironic when the point guard for my girl's team made a so-familiar statement when I took her out at the end of the game. She stated, "They never pass me the ball!" It was then, and for the first time, I believed we should tape these games! This player handled the ball well, shot most of the time, and got her own rebounds and would shoot again. She did pass to other players, but to any observer, this statement was funny. Another lighter side was that no one needed taping, no one complained of being injured, and everyone looked in the crowd for parents and fan support! By the end of the evening, everything had changed, and remained the same.

One player did shoot at the wrong basket, one did tower over the others, no one wanted to sit out, and at most one could dribble with confidence.

On the way home, I was already organizing facts, skill levels, and strategies to begin them on the long road to winning.
