

Leadership Through the COVID-19 Pandemic

Business Resilience Is The New Norm

With the first wave of the COVID-19 virus rapidly passing through the world, organizations have started to execute response plans in ways they had not anticipated or tested at this scale before.

As we move into the next phase of the pandemic and global economic crisis, organizations are looking at ways to enhance and improve response plans and create more resilient organizations. From ensuring the stability and availability of core systems, to supply chain, HR, and third-party vendor strategies, organizations are working at a rapid pace to properly outfit a work-from-home / mobile team environment

To prepare for a potential next wave, these are the questions that companies are asking themselves:

- What gaps exist in our current plans, and what new scenarios do we need to consider as we rebound from the crisis?
- What level of Crisis Management support will be needed to support uncertainties that exist in the recovery plan and timeline?
- Have we created work environments that enable our employees to perform their work effectively and efficiently?
- Have we considered the risks associated with the new remote work environment?
- What policies need to change across our business and operations to ensure the health and safety of our employees and customers?
- How will leadership roles shift and adapt to support the business and our people?
- Are communication plans effective and sustainable?
- With shrinking budgets, how do we prioritize investments, including new investments, to mitigate ongoing disruptions?
- Do we have the right capabilities and competencies to sustain our operations and response plans?
