

If anything was stolen, they wanted to know exactly what was taken and how it happened.

A global manufacturing company approached Avalon, after we were recommended by a mutual associate, to determine whether a high-level employee, who left them for a competitor, had taken confidential information with him to his new employer.

The Challenge

The client wanted Avalon to forensically image the former employee's phone, laptop, and web-based email for analysis to establish whether this person took the company's private information. If anything was stolen, they wanted to know exactly what was taken and how it happened.

The Strategy

Avalon has been providing high-end computer forensic services to the private sector since 2006, so we knew exactly what questions to ask during scoping calls with our client to fully understand the nature of the situation and determine specifically what they wanted to learn from the forensic findings.

The Results

Avalon's investigation showed that the former employee did not take any of our client's sensitive information, which eliminated the need for an expensive, and unnecessary, lawsuit, and put them at ease, as they knew for certain that their confidential information had not been compromised.

QUESTIONS?

For more information on any of our services, please contact:

Ian Gattie

Director of Marketing

716.995.7777

ian.gattie@teamavalon.com