

The Form I-9 has been a hallmark of employee onboarding since the eighties. Updated earlier this year, the mandatory form is used to confirm an employee’s eligibility to work in the U.S. If you’ve ever started a new job and were asked to bring documents to confirm your identity, like a passport or social security card, you’ve filled out an I-9.

The form is divided into three sections, each with a distinct purpose, signer, and deadline.

Section 1 - Employee Information and Attestation

(Signed by employee, due on first day)

The first page of the form is completed by the employee on his or her first day at work. Individuals will be asked to disclose personal information including their legal name, home address, date of birth, social security number, and telephone number. They’ll be asked to specify their citizenship or immigration status, and if applicable, alien registration number.

Form I-9, Employment Eligibility Verification

Read instructions carefully before completing this form. The instructions must be available during completion of this form.

ANTI-DISCRIMINATION NOTICE: It is illegal to discriminate against work-authorized individuals. Employers CANNOT specify which document(s) they will accept from an employee. The refusal to hire an individual because the documents have a future expiration date may also constitute illegal discrimination.

Section 1. Employee Information and Verification (To be completed and signed by employee at the time employment begins.)

Section 2 - Employer Review and Verification

(Signed by employer, due by third day)

Employers must complete section 2 within three business days of the employee’s start date. This part of the Form I-9 tasks HR with recording and examining a new hire’s corroborating documents.

*The content of this publication is provided for informational purposes only and does not contain or constitute legal advice. Do not rely on this information to take any legal decision without consulting with appropriate legal counsel.

Permissible documents include a U.S. or foreign passport, driver's license, Form I-94, social security card, and a wide variety of others. If the individual is a minor, they can even use their school report card. The thing to note is that only the right combination of documents will satisfy the form's requirements. For example, a U.S. passport can be used alone, but if employees provide their driver's license, they'll need to provide a supporting document, like their social security card or birth certificate. An outline of these requirements can be found on page four of the I-9, or on the USCIS website.

Under anti-discrimination laws, it's important to note that employers cannot specify which documents an employee provides, so long as they meet the form's requirements. All documents must be unexpired and physically in your hands. No scans or photocopies allowed! If you're onboarding a new hire that's working in another office, keep in mind that you can ask an onsite employee to cover for you—or even use a third party, like a notary.

Section 3 - Reverification and Rehire

(Signed by employer, only if the employee's authorization expires)

If the employee's proof of work authorization or immigration status is due to expire, employers must revisit his or her Form I-9 and complete section 3. This part of the form is used for entering new document numbers (if applicable) and their updated expiration dates.

As in Section 2, you'll need to physically handle the documents to confirm their authenticity.

While not mandatory, the USCIS recommends completing Section 3 when an employee legally changes his or her name or is rehired within three years of the employee's original start date.

► START HERE: Read instructions carefully before completing this form. The instructions must be available, either in paper or electronically, during completion of this form. Employers are liable for errors in the completion of this form.

ANTI-DISCRIMINATION NOTICE: It is illegal to discriminate against work-authorized individuals. Employers CANNOT specify which document(s) an employee may present to establish employment authorization and identity. The refusal to hire or continue to employ an individual because the documentation presented has a future expiration date may also constitute illegal discrimination.

Section 1. Employee Information and Attestation (Employees must complete and sign Section 1 of Form I-9 no later than the first day of employment, but not before accepting a job offer.)
