

Less Stress for Jeff

When his brother died, it fell to Jeff to clean out a house full of electronics, musical instruments and collectibles. But Jeff lived an 8-hour drive away. Knowing that some items were likely valuable, Jeff contacted auction houses for help, but they weren't willing to sort through the dense clutter to find value. With no other options, Jeff decided to do the work himself. He started making the long drive every other weekend, leaving his family back home while he worked alone to empty the house.

Fast Cleanup Saves Valuable Time

After two years of working hard, Jeff had only cleaned about halfway through the living room. He realized that he faced another two years of long drives, giving up family weekends and taking time off work. When we met Jeff, his shoulders were tense, his breathing was tight and he sighed frequently as he told his story.

JEFF ASKED US FOR HELP

We signed on to finish the job, within his guidelines:

- Find specific items, including a signed baseball, family photographs, toy trains, and various firearms located in the house.
- Schedule the work over a long weekend, when Jeff could be present without taking time away from work.
- Identify collectibles with potential value, and arrange to sell them at auction.
- Itemize all inventory for probate.

NO MORE PRESSURE

Our team emptied and cleaned the house and basement in four days, locating every item that Jeff requested. We filled a 20-foot panel truck with collectibles bound for auction — items that Jeff had been tempted to just throw away. Then we cleaned up the house to list it for sale.

JEFF* GETS HIS SMILE BACK

As our service team cleared the rooms, Jeff relaxed. His breathing became easier. At the end of the first day he was telling happy stories about his brother. By the last day, Jeff was smiling and laughing again.
