

Become an External Peer Reviewer

Help provide peer review that is fair, accurate, and valuable

Do you have what it takes to be a Greeley reviewer?

In addition to consulting, education, and interim staffing, The Greeley Company offers External Peer Review Services to hospitals and physician groups. Due to extraordinary demand, we're seeking to expand our esteemed physician reviewer panel. We encourage you to consider becoming an expert physician reviewer for us.

Top 3 reasons to consider becoming an External Peer Reviewer

Becoming an external peer reviewer for The Greeley Company offers an opportunity to earn some extra income by applying your expertise outside your day-to-day practice. We find, however, that most of our physician reviewers enjoy the work for reasons unrelated to compensation, including:

- 1. Clinical and intellectual stimulation: Applying current evidence-based medicine to your case reviews is interesting and professionally satisfying
- 2. Self-improvement and awareness: Reviewing cases helps physicians improve their own clinical care and documentation
- 3. An opportunity to make a difference: Serving as an objective external case reviewer offers a way to improve care provided by others and give back to the medical community (other physicians, hospitals, and patients)

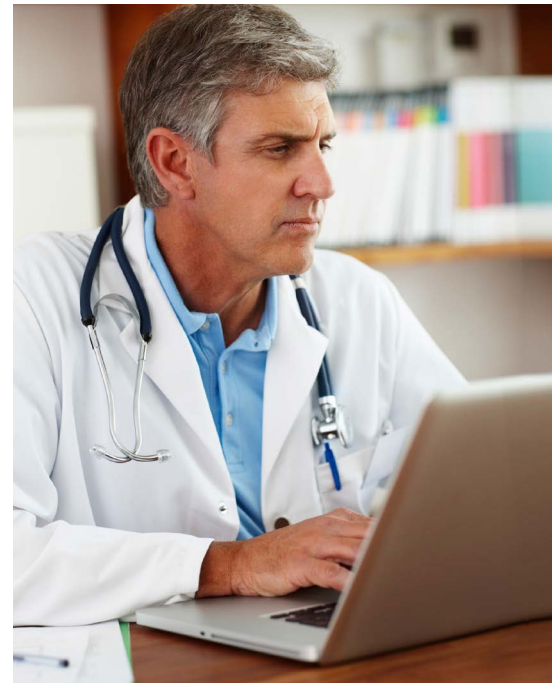

What makes a good external peer reviewer?

While The Greeley Company trains and prepares our external peer reviewers for their roles, there are certain qualities that our physician reviewers share, including the ability to:

- Provide accurate, objective reviews of cases that reflect the most current standards of care in the field
- Base findings on comparison with current evidence-based medicine and consensus guidelines, when available and relevant
- Support your case analysis with concise, compelling clinical logic

Why do hospitals need external peer review?

External peer review is necessary when concerns have been raised about a physician's care to patients and the hospital does not feel that it is able to assess the care the physician provided due to such reasons as lack of internal expertise or an irreconcilable conflict of interest. The Greeley Company often provides external peer review to resolve a conflict or to provide due diligence before deciding upon corrective action.
