

Modern workplace automation

The challenge

Managing the workplace environment can often include manual, person dependent and very labour intense tasks that increase lead times at the best and human errors and outages at its worst.

Ad-hoc changes creates an uncontrolled, non-homogenous environment with lack of lifecycle management, quality and ownership. The result is an unstructured way of working where policies and processes for the organizational are not applied.

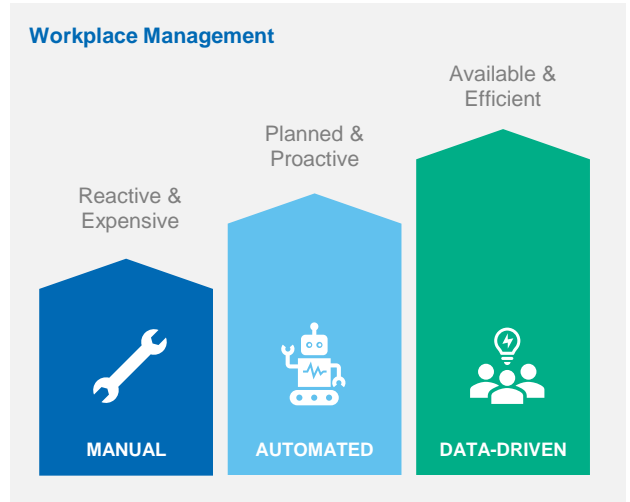

Lack of automation strategy will increase cost and require reactive time-consuming assessments and clean-ups that leads to friction, inefficiency and frustration for the organization.

The solution

To create a foundation for a friction free Modern Workplace, a solid automation strategy and transformation plan needs to be established.

Automating prioritized processes in a controlled manner reduce person dependencies, human mistakes, cost and lead time to a minimum.

Enabling a single point of entry for automation, with self-service capabilities, increase the simplicity, availability, efficiency and will drive a culture of automation, innovation and co-creation.

The value

Shifting from Operations to Automation embraces your policies and processes and frees up time for Innovation. Data will always be up to date with high delivery precision and quality.

Consistent and delegated approval flows ensures that decisions are made at the right level. Flows can be both event driven or manually triggered. As the workplace area expands, additional hires needed for new workloads can be reduced.

Lifecycle managed processes will always be available, and tasks will be performed in the same manner all the time without unnecessary lead time and cost.
