

AVC Governance. Simplified

The efficient and economic way for trustees to manage AVC schemes

AVCs are dead

The new pension legislation introduced in 2015 brought more freedom to employees when choosing how to use their pension funds.

We think these options are great news and welcome the change. However, other pension legislation introduced over the years hasn't always been so kind, particularly to the trustees and employers who are working hard to get the best outcomes for their employees.

One of the big challenges many schemes face today is dealing with additional voluntary contributions (AVCs). Whilst schemes were originally required to offer AVCs, the necessity was removed in 2006. And many trustees stopped offering their AVC option.

Long live AVCs

Spring forward to 2013 and The Pensions Regulator's Code of Practice 13 for Defined Contribution (DC) schemes began to move AVCs back up the agenda.

The Code is being updated and, combined with other legislation over the years, could leave many schemes with the headache of managing an onerous legacy of AVCs. It's a legacy that requires clear member communications, regular reviews, benchmarking investment performance and ensuring costs are appropriate. Members may also begin asking if they are getting value for money.

And it's time and money that scheme sponsors might want the trustees to focus on, for example, other areas of the scheme, such as its deficit.

A brief history of AVCs

1999	Equitable Life collapses.	The cost of offering unsustainable pension guarantees catches up with Equitable Life.
2006	Schemes no longer required to offer AVCs.	Pension Simplification sees the end of AVCs for many schemes.
2013	Code of Practice 13 introduced.	New guidance for pensions legislation sets a benchmark for the governance of Occupational DC schemes.
2015	Greater pension freedom.	The Chancellor introduces major changes to pensions, giving people greater control over how they use their retirement funds.
November 2015 - January 2016	Consultation launched on a new Code of Practice.	It will focus on the trustee board, scheme management skills, administration, investment governance, value for members, and communicating and reporting. It's likely to be introduced in July 2016.
April 2016	Commission ceases for Qualifying Workplace Pension Schemes (QWPS).	The end of commission changes the advice landscape.

It seemed like a good idea at the time

AVCs were originally a welcome addition to pension schemes. They enabled members, and potentially employers, to boost retirement funds. Many also came with a range of guarantees, such as minimum annuity rates and growth rates.

Given the changes to pension legislation over the years, such as pension simplification and the more recent freedoms, AVCs can seem as though they've been left behind. With new regulation, trustees need to plan for the future of their AVC funds.

"For Defined Benefit (DB) schemes where the only DC benefits are the AVCs, recent legislation may lead to disproportionate governance costs - particularly if the value of those AVCs is low."

5 things trustees need to consider

- 1. Governance
As trustees, are you ready for the changes?
- 2. Communications
Do your members understand what the pension changes mean?
- 3. Options
Is the scheme ready to deal with new pension freedoms?
- 4. Risk
Have investments been reviewed to ensure they are appropriate?
- 5. Policy
Are your scheme's policies and rulings up to date?

So what's the solution?

Straightforward

The solution needs to be simple for all, enabling a clear, effective way to manage AVCs.

Trusted

Pensions are about the future, so the solution must protect the needs of members both today and tomorrow.

Cost effective

To support the trustees and meet the requirements of Code of Practice 13, it needs to give value for money.

Managed risks

Opportunities and risks need to be managed with expertise, skill and the highest standards of governance.

Time saving

Managing the AVC element of a scheme takes valuable time. So any opportunity to enable trustees to focus on other challenges offered by their schemes can be crucial.

“Employers are facing increasing pressure to help their employees plan for retirement. At the same time, many DB AVCs are outdated in terms of both investment strategy and fee structures.”

Welcome to the future

Welcome to PS Aspire's Master Trust - the efficient, effective and economic way to manage AVCs

Our Master Trust is designed for DB schemes with AVCs.

It has its own set of rules and trustees, including highly respected and experienced independent trustees Capita Pension Trustees and Pitmans Trustees.

By enabling multiple employers to join under a single governance structure, we can deliver an effective, efficient and economic solution.

It ensures the members' benefits and guarantees are maintained and protected.

And it has a range of fee structures so trustees can manage their AVC governance costs and find the best option for members.

"We believe Master Trusts have a valuable role to play in building a workplace savings culture and helping members get the retirement they need. Most importantly, though, a master trust can help give confidence in the governance structure."

Our process

Whilst we understand every scheme is different, the process we follow is designed to be as straightforward as possible. And it's based on our experience of working with different employers and different pension schemes.

	Months
Time	1	1	1	1
Activity	Initial meetings and briefings.	Gain full understanding of your scheme and the benefits it is offering to members.	Trustees consider the option of moving their AVC policies to the PS Aspire Master Trust	Check the scheme rules and obtain confirmation from the AVC provider(s) and the trustees' advisers that a transfer of the policies can go ahead.

“The opportunity we’ve created for trustees isn’t about handing off an inconvenient problem. It’s about enabling trustees to focus on the core scheme, drive efficiency and get better value for money.”
