General Market Commentary

As the quarter progressed, major central banks signalled an openness to loosen monetary policy in order to support their economies. Inflation and growth remained below target and trade tensions between the US and China continued. Subsequently, the Federal Reserve and European Central Bank offered the promise of further stimulus which was a boost to risk assets. The Bank of England was less dovish but left monetary policy unchanged in June while lowering its growth forecast for the UK to zero for the second quarter. Government bond yields fell in developed markets.

In April, Brexit was delayed once again, with the EU agreeing to an extension of Article 50. The new date of departure from the EU is 31st October. Prime minister Theresa May announced later in the quarter that she was stepping down as leader of the Conservative party, triggering a race to replace her. Two leadership candidates remained at the end of the quarter, Boris Johnson and Jeremy Hunt. The US and China have agreed to resume trade talks following a meeting between leaders Donald Trump and Xi Jinping at the G20 summit at the end of June. An agreement had appeared close in April, before Trump raised tariffs in May following a breakdown in negotiations.
