

Forecasting And D-Metric™

Worried about ensuring you have the right levels of banknotes in stock? Not sure when to place your next banknote order?

DLR Analytics™ can provide an in-depth forecasting assessment utilising monthly issuance data, which supports a detailed management of note lives and stock volumes.

DLR Analytics provides a denominational structure analysis, including an assessment of the note/coin boundary and any need for new values. The analysis also provides a 5 year forecast that allows you to explore what is the right financial decision for you and your market.

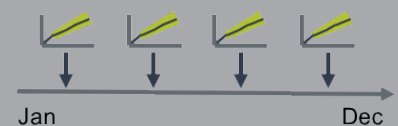

You have noticed that your highest denomination makes up more than 80% of your value in circulation.

You start to consider whether you need to review your denominational structure? Is there anything available that can help you do this?

Using the different scenarios provided by DLR Analytics and having decided to introduce a new high value, what orders are required to maintain the right stock levels?

DLR Analytics can provide a forecasting assessment, at regular intervals, to ensure that you are ordering notes and maintaining stocks efficiently.

DeLaRue

In-Depth Forecasting

Accurate forecasting of banknotes ensures that a central bank can meet the demand of their banking system by supplying banknotes when required. Utilising data collected through DLR Analytics, the team of experts are able to complete a robust forecast assessment of currency in circulation, replacement rates and stock management. This information can be used to identify when banknote orders and deliveries are required to ensure circulation levels of each denomination remain at the central bank's target level.

Denomination Review

For a growing economy it is only natural to periodically review your currency structure. By taking into account your current note and coin denominations and average earnings, DLR Analytics utilises De La Rue's unique D-Metric® statistical methodology to analyse the best denominational structure for now and in the future, which includes the introduction or retirement of denominations over time.
