As any parent knows, you can't always count on your child to communicate effectively. This isn't because they're unreliable; it's because they're children. In other words, they have little to no frame of reference, especially when it comes to their vision. Many children have poor vision and are not aware of it because they have no way of knowing that this isn't how everyone sees the world around them. Don't worry; we're here for you when you're ready to schedule an eye exam for your child!	It's Children's Eyecare Week; this week, we're posting about all the ways that children's eyecare is so unique and important. It's vital to start early when it comes to your vision. WEEK 4	CONTENT  Subject: Digital Lenses Protect Your Sight  As technology has advanced and become such a massive part of everyday life (at work and at home), eyeglass technology has advanced with it. Make sure to protect your vision from digital eye strain with glasses designed to reduce stress on your vision. Trust us; when it comes to the long-term health of your vision, it pays to be thorough, and we can help.  Contact us at your leisure to learn more about digital eye strain and what we can do to prevent it.	This week, we're all about digital eye strain. Glasses with protection against digital eye strain are becoming more frequent and more affordable than ever. Learn more about the need for multiple pairs, including DES-protective ones, here:	CONTENT  Glasses that prevent digital eye strain don't look any different than regular glasses, and yet, they can make a huge difference.	It could seem counterintuitive to have more than one pair of glasses. The truth? You need different pairs for different needs.	When we think "eye protection," it's often the case that we're talking about wearing goggles or avoiding injuries. However, digital eye strain is one of the leading causes of eye strain, and it's vital you learn to protect your vision.	Share digital eye strain stories from your practice. If it's patient information, make sure you have permission before posting.
