Historical Art Museum to Get High-Tech Key Control

KeyWatcher has become the system of choice for the Fine Arts Museum of Nantes, which first opened in 1801 and boasts a priceless collection of paintings and sculpture going back to the 13th century. Managing security can be particularly complex for museums, which have to ensure convenient access while still ensuring safety for guests and employees, and for the collection itself.

Oftentimes, the facilities must also abide by state regulations spanning fire, historical preservation, contractor supervision and more—all with an infrastructure where the age of individual components might be couple of months or a couple of centuries. Not surprisingly, no two museums will have the exact same security needs, meaning any key control system needs to provide flexibility in addition to reliable security.

Surging Enthusiasm on the International Show Circuit

It's been a busy few weeks, with the team hitting the road (or the airways, as the case may be) and exhibiting at SKYDD in Sweden, Expo Protection in France, the Horeca Expo in Belgium, Patient First Expo in the UK, IFSEC in Malaysia... and the response has been outstanding. Visitors across various industries have continued to embrace the latest hardware upgrades for the Touch, and the recent updates to KeyWatcher's access control integrations drew praise as well.

KeyWatcher Scores Goal with Juventus FC

Juventus Football Club will soon be protected by KeyWatcher. The club, founded in 1897, is the second oldest of its kind in Italy, and among the most distinguished internationally. As other sports arenas have shown, key control is an integral part of facility security: not just for the athletes but for facility staff and fans as well.

Key Inventory Systems Support Biometrics for Enhanced Security

Posted on October 21, 2016

A number of recent articles have put forth the proposition that the password as a security measure is dead. The reasons listed are many, including how easily they are forgotten, the password is weak or easily guessed and how quickly cyber criminals can get around them. Not mentioned in these articles but posing a similar challenge is the use of PINs or smart cards as security measures. Continue reading
