

Transforming Client Services in a Regulated Industry

Mini Case Study

Financial Services Solutions Provider uses BusinessOptix to transform client services processes

With multiple applications (such as Visio, Word, PowerPoint and an EA tool) and no standards or common language for process design this financial services solutions provider was seeing significant process errors and wasting time recreating processes that already existing (in silos). To address these challenges they wanted to transform the creation and management of the processes that unpin their client services, whilst ensuring that their regulatory requirements were met.

Using BusinessOptix the solutions provider used its process design knowledge and capabilities to create as-is and compliant to-be processes including adding descriptions and contextual data against processes; capture requirements across all stakeholders; deliver work instructions and a knowledge repository; implement a collaborative review and feedback process between process designers and stakeholders, and rollout 100s of new processes with embedded regulatory controls and the ability to capture evidence of their use.

BusinessOptix was also used to help train the team, set standards and best practice guides, set-up a central repository, create a direct integration into their BPM engine to deliver process automation (where required).

As a result, they have been able to elimination errors, remove the need to recreate process, improve the documentation, storing and sharing of processes, whilst seeing team members embrace the new way of working and as a result more standard ways of working, reuse and sharing.

Going forward the team will be working on cross functional process design, overlaying data on top of their processes to understand performance and areas for improvement, and extending their capabilities to support RPA (Robotic Process Automation).
