

HIV Testing in Pregnancy

All pregnant women should give serious consideration to an HIV test during the early part of pregnancy. Any person who is sexually active is at least potentially at risk for HIV infection. Many people who are HIV positive do not belong to any particular risk group, such as drug users.

HIV in pregnancy has potentially serious implications for mother and baby. We have the capacity to offer medications in pregnancy to help protect transmission of the virus to the baby. Obviously, we cannot offer medication unless we know your HIV status. Most women will have a normal or negative result and will be relieved by having this information. If you do test positive, we will help you in obtaining specialized care for yourself and your baby.
