Sheffield Children's Hospital - case study

Project overview

Auburn Ainsley were appointed to provide quantity surveying services for multiple wards in Sheffield Childrens Hospital, including a new outpatient department with a children's play tower right at its heart.

Why us?

Auburn Ainsley have an on-going relationship with SCH, having delivering numerous projects over the last 20 years for them. This allowed them to offer the "safe pair of hands" needed to deliver this iconic project.

The challenge

During work, an access road had to be blocked off to squeeze a large extension into an existing site whilst the hospital was to remain fully in use. Daily access via road was also required for the delivery of medical and other equipment.

What we did

A professional, timely and consistent service was provided across all aspects of the project, overcoming tough challenges with the location and disputes between designers and contractors.

Our achievements

The project was delivered to a benchmarked cost, lower than similar projects.

The project has since won three awards - including the Healthcare Estates IHEEM Award for Best New Build Project of the Year.
