

Why run address history in a background check?

Confirm identity

SSN match, primary name used, deathmaster index, alias names, date of birth

Define search scope

gives our researchers dates of residence and jurisdictions to search

Use as an identifier

for public records, such as criminal

How much info could I possibly get?

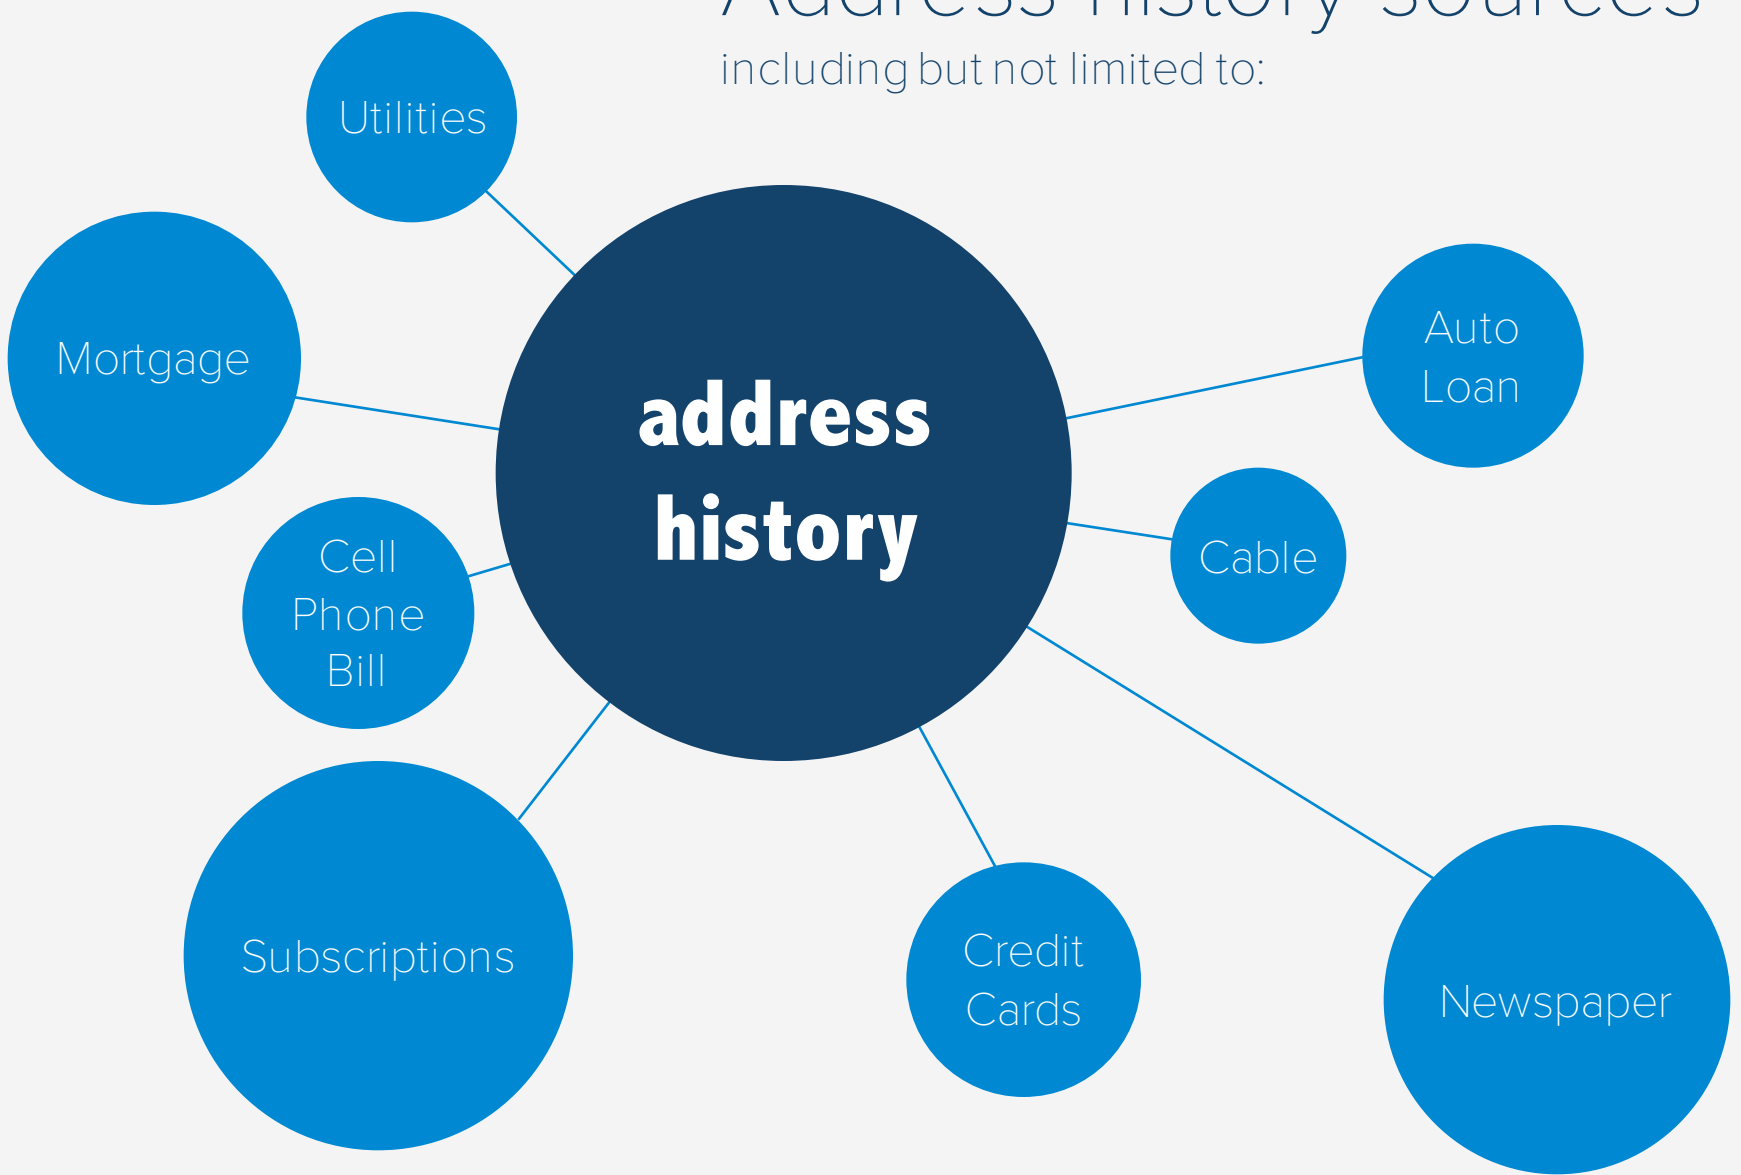

Rent	37% Adults Rent	1-3 yrs. Typical Lease Term
Own	11.7x Average times an American moves	13 yrs. Average ownership before moving

These impact address history lists:

- Type of employment (ex. traveling nurse)
- Age (avg. first time homebuyer is 33 yrs. old)
- Credit (primary data source is the Credit Bureau)
- Graduation Date (recent grad = school address)
- Military service (assignments)

What matters most from the address history?

Last date & zip code

Date tells you when a company last reported that address, which suggests how recent the applicant lived at this address. The zip code defines the jurisdictions for court searches. Together, these drive public record research: criminal, civil, federal, etc.

something is WrONg?

Discrepancies could indicate stolen identity (worst case) or just a simple typo. Sometimes, addresses where your applicant didn't live could show up, such as if they co-signed for a loan. Or, a company might continue to report on an account for years after the applicant lived there. Unfortunately, it's all up to the credit bureaus and reporting company...

Not to fret, though! Contact us with questions/concerns. You should still search the jurisdiction because there is usually a reason why it's there... it's better than missing a record!
