Case Study

YWCA Columbus

As a 90-year-old building in constant use, the time had come to make some much-needed updates to the historic Griswold building, which houses the YWCA Center for Women. A year-long renovation project brought this LEED certified building into the 21st century, while still keeping the integrity of this special structure from the early 1900s.

Results:

We tackled some interesting projects during this renovation in order to preserve the historical guidelines for the space, including coming up with creative solutions to customize the space and turning an old bowling alley into a co-working space, with the original bowling lane floors intact.
