PRESS RELEASE

For Immediate Release

February 16, 2007

idX Opens New Louisville Facility

St. Louis, MO—idX Corporation, a worldwide leader in retail fixtures, logistics and project management, has opened a new Louisville facility, bringing the company's total U.S. capacity to more than 1.5 million square feet.

The new 320,000-square foot plant, located in Louisville's neighbor city of Jeffersonville, Indiana, includes manufacturing, distribution and offices. Initially, 125 employees will be located at the new facility, increasing to 190 over the next three years.

The new facility replaces a previous factory/office location and three leased warehouses. Louisville General Manager David Kilgore supervised the planning, construction and move, which took place December 5.

"Growth has been phenomenal for idX Louisville," Kilgore said, "and this state-of-the-art facility takes our capability for high-volume manufacturing to a whole new level."

"The new facility offers us a great strategic location to increase our manufacturing and distribution capability," said Terry Schultz, idX CEO.
