idX Expands New Louisville Facility

St. Louis, MO—idX Corporation, a worldwide leader in fixture manufacturing, logistics and project management for the retail, financial, hospitality and point-of-purchase markets, has expanded its new Louisville facility, adding 100,000 square feet.

The expansion comes just 15 months after idX moved into the building, and brings the division's total capacity to 420,000 square feet. Located in Louisville's neighbor city of Jeffersonville, Indiana, the plant includes manufacturing, distribution and offices.

"After just over a year in the new facility, we've expanded our footprint by over 30%," said Louisville General Manager David Kilgore. "idX always strives to stay ahead of the growth curve when it comes to resources, and it takes real vision to stay ahead of this particular curve."

The new space will be used for warehousing and distribution, as well as light assembly on import components and fixtures, to support large rollouts.

With the expansion, the Louisville division plans to add new project management and operations staff within the next year, growing from the current 130 employees to 150.
