VIDARIS, Inc. Expands Renewable Energy Division

New York City (November 8, 2012) – Vidaris, Inc. has expanded the Vidaris Renewable Energy Division to address a growing demand for renewable energy solutions in our client base and in the marketplace which encompasses solar photovoltaic, building-integrated photovoltaic, building-applied photovoltaic, wind and solar thermal integrated technologies. Vidaris Renewable Energy provides building owners, developers, designers and managers an independent, third-party, technically-proficient advisor to evaluate project opportunities and to assist in the design, integration and implementation of renewable energy technologies. Services include feasibility analysis, financial analysis, renewable energy system design, performance verification, owner's representative services, construction administration, and commissioning or retro-commissioning services for renewable energy systems.

Our experienced team of industry professionals is well equipped to meet the needs for renewable energy consulting so our clients are confident that they are engaging in financially attractive, technically robust and well-integrated energy efficiency and renewable energy solutions. Some of the more recognized renewable energy systems we work with include solar photovoltaic, BIPV, BAPV, wind, and solar thermal systems for both new construction projects and existing building upgrades.

Vidaris draws upon its expertise in building enclosure systems, roofing/waterproofing systems, mechanical systems, sustainability and energy efficiency to integrate renewable energy systems effectively for our clients. "Our Renewable Energy Division enables clients to strategically navigate the renewable energy marketplace and take advantage of the many benefits renewable energy offers to building value," according to John Hannum, PE, VP of Energy Services.
