

OPTIMIZING THE PAST

How to Get More Traffic & Leads From “Old” Blog Content

There are two kinds of marketers...

The first hunts for the one big idea.

$300,000,000

Sales went up 45%!

$15 million in the first month, and $300 million in the first year.

The challenge: “big game” is elusive (if it exists at all).

Then there's the kind of marketer who grows through pervasive optimization.

A person's hand is shown holding a large quantity of small, light-colored, button-like objects. The hand is positioned over a dark, textured surface, and the objects are being poured out, creating a stream of small items falling towards the bottom of the frame. The background is dark and out of focus.

They aim for lots of “$300,000 buttons” (versus holding out for the $300,000,000 payday).

On the HubSpot blogging team,
we're that kind of marketer.

$300,000,000

(Psst ... it's also the best way to find one of these.)

HUBSPOT BLOG: WHO WE ARE & WHAT WE DO

An orange circle is positioned on the left side of a solid blue background. Inside the circle, the text '2,200,000 MONTHLY VISITS' is written in white, bold, uppercase letters.

That's a lot of content.

At HubSpot, we have
ambitious marketing goals.

At HubSpot, we have
ambitious marketing goals.

(Like “orders of magnitude” ambitious in many cases.)

Yet we can't scale content output proportionally to the results we target.

When it comes to content, sometimes old school can be a good thing (namely, when it comes to old school rap or Throwback Thursday on Instagram). But when it comes to your company's public relations strategy, being old school isn't advantageous for your business or your brand.

Ten years ago, people still relied on morning papers for news. Today, the vast majority of your company's customers and prospects scan headlines on Twitter or see what's hot in their Facebook feed. People now have control over where, when, and how they consume information. As a result, public relations is no longer about feeding into a traditional news cycle; it's about providing relevant content when, where, and how your prospects, influencers, and customers will consume it.

Step 3

Call to action make your headline captivating. Use conversational, clear, understandable language, and keep your headline simple and short – (and search engines) reward the brief, so keep your title to one line to clearly focus people's attention on your topline message.

Most importantly, make it interesting: Keep in mind that reporters get dozens, if not hundreds, of releases each day, so invest the time to write a compelling headline. It's worth the time and effort on your part.

2) Don't Play Hard to Get

For reporters, analysts, influencers, or followers to be inclined to share your announcement, you have to tell them upfront why they should care.

The first paragraph of your release should cover the who, what, why, where, and how of your new launch, update, or development. Reporters don't have a ton of time to sift through details and fluffy background information – they just need the facts that'll help them tell your story to someone else from a position of authority.

There shouldn't be any new, crucial information covered after this section that potentially miss.

3) Offer a Tempting Quotable

Once you've set the scene, it's time to bring your details to life with a quote that you can use for context around your announcement and help paint a picture of how you fit into the given industry, customer base, and landscape.

If you're a social media manager, salesperson, customer support rep, or executive, you've likely experienced social media overload or exhaustion. Each and every one of these roles requires busy people to go above and beyond to respond to fans, deal with people's problems, or dig deeper to find unique opportunities.

But there's one big problem here ... social media never sleeps! And 72% of people who complain on Twitter expect a response within an hour. Unbelievable, I know. That means a single meeting during your workday could prevent you from saving a relationship with an unhappy prospect or customer.

This offer drove 11,500
