Introduction

55% of consumers don't trust companies they buy from as much as they used to, according to a 2018 trust survey by HubSpot Research.

We're losing them.

And due in large part to their enhanced ability to self-educate online, consumers are feeling more empowered and independent when it comes to making buying decisions without us.

We're becoming optional.

For business leaders, this makes relationship building with existing and prospective customers a challenge that will only continue to snowball. It also places a greater emphasis on the need for clear and convenient lines of communication for those times when someone actually does want to reach out.

Today, a thoughtful "contact us" page, while often neglected during redesign projects, could be the one thing that sways a consumer's decision to connect with your business, making it more important than ever before. But it's not enough to list a single phone number for a call center that's only open during business hours. Consumers want more – they expect more.

If customer loyalty, pipeline building, referrals, or increased consumer satisfaction are on your to-do list for the coming quarter, one of the simplest ways to make progress is to help customer and prospects reach solutions or gain context about your business faster, via a channel that they've self-selected.

To help shed some light on how you might reimagine your existing “contact us” page, we’ve curated a collection of inspiring examples, alongside tips and suggestions designed to help you build trust and connect more meaningfully with the folks expressing interest in your product or service.

AGENCY

Young and Hyperactive

The screenshot shows a web page for the agency 'YOUNG AND HYPERACTIVE'. The header includes a logo, navigation links (SERVICE, CASE STUDIES, DAS TEAM, KARRIERE, WORKSHOPS, KONTAKT), and a 'STARTE EIN PROJEKT' button. The main heading is 'PACKEN WIR'S AN!'. Below it, a dropdown menu is open, showing options: Web Design, Brand Identity, Mobile/App, E-Commerce, and Development. The form text is partially visible, showing a conversational tone. At the bottom, there is a checkbox for terms and conditions and a 'LET'S GET CREATIVE TODAY!' button. A vertical text 'DRÖHLE TWITTER AN' is on the right side.

DRÖHLE TWITTER AN

This Germany-based branding and digital design agency chose to employ an interactive, natural language form on its contact page, creating a friendly experience for prospective clients.

The form also highlights a bit of the brand's personality and creativity by allowing those filling it out to choose different personas – a cowboy, a pirate, Yoda, etc. – that automatically adjust the tone of the form. For example, selecting “cowboy” triggers a “howdy” sign off for your message.

Artists Web

This independent digital agency allows people to reach out in a way that makes the most sense for them - whether that be via text or voice. This approach not only lowers the barrier to outreach, but also allows for the potential client to deliver as little, or as much, context as they feel comfortable with.

Yummygum

This design studio from Amsterdam has a charming split-screen contact page. On the left, visitors will find basic location information, as well as links to the studio's social channels.

On the right, a clickable email address pulls up an open message in your respective email client, making for a seamless transaction. If visitors prefer to provide a bit more context surrounding their outreach, they can choose what they'd like to talk about from three options that highlight the brand's personality: your great project, meeting for a coffee, or the birds and the bees.

RXBAR

This protein bar company serves as a great example of a minimal contact page done right.

Aside from containing all of the necessary contact info one would expect, RXBAR employed a few lines of genuine, customer-centric copy:

“Customer Service - real customer service - is one of our core values. So, we promise to go above and beyond to get what you need. If you can’t find your answer on our FAQ page, please see how to get in touch with us. We look forward to hearing from you.”

When selecting carefully, sometimes a few words can go a long way in helping you build trust with your existing and potential customers.

The page is easy to navigate, while providing plenty of context for those looking to self-educate a bit before determining whether or not they need to hop on a call or send an email.

Spendee

Spendee's contact page is fairly straightforward, covering all of the essential information to help visitors get in touch. The interesting element? The Facebook Messenger bot at the bottom. When prompted, this bot strikes up an engaging conversation to help visitors familiarize themselves with what Spendee has to offer.

Hi 🙋, my name is Dollar, the Spendee Bot. I am a virtual but valuable member of our Spendee family.

I know whole a lot about money management and my job is to help you get your money into shape 🙌.

This year, I've came up with a New Year challenge to help you stick to your financial resolutions. Are you in? 🙋

Parkbench

When you reach out to company, you want to know that you're reaching out to a human. Parkbench's contact page plays into that idea by highlighting its team of friendly faces in the header image. This really helps to humanize the brand.

Below the team photo, specific email addresses are made available to solve for individual visitor needs – customer support, sales, general inquiries, etc.

Capital Pacific

Capital Pacific's clean design paired with friendly copy create a welcoming experience on its contact page. Simplified contact information for each of its three offices is displayed prominently below the header, covering addresses, phone and fax numbers, and an email address.

Rather than just displaying its social media icons to encourage visitors to connect, Capital Pacific leveraged an opportunity to set expectations for each channel. For example, next to the Twitter icon, you'll find the copy, "what we're reading."

REAL ESTATE

RIPCO Real Estate

Talk about a stunning design! RIPCO Real Estate blends bold header copy (“Real Estate. Real Talk.”) with a sleek card-style design to highlight the contact information across four offices.

We especially like that each office offers a CTA to “Meet the Team,” as it allows visitors to put faces to the company and begin to build trust in the process.

Conclusion

Feeling inspired?

No matter your industry or what your buyer personas are like, every business should strive for a great “contact us” page. A well-thought contact page design will make it easy to engage with your audience as well as create a positive, long-lasting relationship with them.

Don’t leave this opportunity on the table. Take the learnings from this collection of well-designed pages back to your business and use them to rethink the impression you are making.

Are you clearly presenting multiple options for prospective and current customers to get in touch?

Are you setting expectations for a response time?

Are you giving them a reason to reach out in the first place?

Revisit your contact page and give these questions some thought -- your customers will notice, trust us.

Provide customers with support when they need it, and where they want it.
