Slow and steady wins the race

After the latest update from our PM, we still need to stick together and work carefully on moving forward. Returning to the norm after lockdown will be a slow and steady process, but we can start with some small steps. Not a lot has changed so far, with some people cautiously returning to work and others still smashing the home school tutoring, working from home and looking after families and communities. We all play a big part in keeping one another safe and spirits high.

Thankfully we live in a time of excellent technology and entertainment! So bust the boredom with this weeks favourites.

The second season of Dead to Me is now on Netflix. If you haven't watched the first season, you've now got both seasons to binge!

Jen befriends an eccentric optimist who isn't quite what she seems while searching for the hit-and-run driver who mowed down her husband. Expect twists and turns!

Stay Sharp & Boost Productivity

Your brain might not feel as overworked as it does after it's usual day at work right now, unless you're trying to get your head around these home school lessons before sharing them with your children, of course.

Keep your brain active and improve your skills in math, reading, writing, speaking, and listening with this app.

Cosmic Kids makes yoga and mindfulness fun for kids.

Parents and teachers report significant improvements in self-regulation, focus and empathy in their children since taking part.

Watch on YouTube or download the app!

A great way to start their home school day!

Collins Word of the Day

Expand your vocabulary by learning a new word every day with carefully curated - and often unusual - word choices.

Here you'll find five free maths lessons for children (Years 1-8) created by a group of teachers and mathematicians. Each lesson comes with a video that you can watch on your own to understand the lesson first, or with your child.

Each lesson lasts 20-30 minutes and the team recommends you do one session a day.
