Klondike Kate Ryan was not a dance-hall entertainer as her name might suggest or as Pierre Berton describes in his book "Klondike". She was, rather, a Northern frontier heroine and a large contributor to the development of our Canada. Born Katherine Ryan on August 20, 1869 in Johnville, NB, she traveled across the continent to Seattle, where she became a nurse in the Sisters of Nahomish Hospital.

Later, in Vancouver, she joined the Klondike gold rush, a bold move for a woman in that day and age. For her journey to the goldfields, she purchased her equipment from the Hudson Bay Company. The manager stated,

"Any lady with the courage to head out to the Yukon on her own, deserves the support of The Hudson Bay Company."

After enduring a rough voyage by steamer and a harsh winter months moving along the trails she made it to the Klondike and staked three claims.

Among her accomplishments, Klondike Kate became the first female member (Special Constable) of the North West Mounted Police.

She became the first female gold inspector collecting royalties on gold nuggets being taken from the Yukon. She was a jail keeper, operated a restaurant and was involved in many business and political affairs. She never left her nursing skills very far behind, either. She once performed some "table-top" surgery when sewing back in place the lip of a Swedish miner, the miner having been involved in a bar room brawl.

Klondike Kate left her mark in Canadian history as an early suffragette and important political figure in Northern Canada. It is reported that Kate's motto was:

"I Wasn't Built for Going Backwards. When I Once Step Forward, I Must Go Ahead."

Klondike Kate died in 1932 in Vancouver at the age of 63.

Editors note: The was a bit of confusion over who was the real Klondike Kate. Although a dance hall girl, Kate Rockwell, took the nickname for herself, Katherine Ryan was the real Klondike Kate.
