With the Kansas legislative session underway, two workers' comp bills are garnering attention. HB 2012 would remove the "prevailing factor" requirement for making a workers' comp claim and instead require that the work injury be only a substantial or material element of an injury. Additionally, HB 2013 would require the use of the 4th edition of the AMA guide rather than the 6th edition, which the Court of Appeals ruled unconstitutional last year.

The New York Assembly is considering a bill that requires a prescribing physician to counsel a patient on the risks of overdose associated with opioids. They then must also inform the patient of the availability of opioid antagonists, like naloxone, at the start of every calendar year that a patient is on an opioid.

Chicago Mayor Rahm Emanuel has announced plans to restructure Chicago's workers' comp program following the FBI investigation of it's former controller. The proposal would move control of the program to a City Council committee who would report to the city comptroller's office.

HB 5144 was introduced in the Connecticut House this week. The bill would require physicians to check the PDMP report on their patients before issuing any prescriptions. The bill is currently before the Joint Committee on Public Health.
